INTRODUCTION

Microlog: Canadian Research Index puts all of Canada's hard-to-find government and research literature at your fingertips. This monthly indexing, abstracting and document delivery service covers all levels of government in Canada, as well as institutions receiving research grants. Most titles included in Microlog are available in either paper or microfiche format. Combined with a microfiche collection, the Microlog Service is a powerful tool for finding Canadian report publications. The unique Microlog Accession Number is the key to immediate retrieval of any document.

SCOPE

Among other documents, Microlog includes research papers in physical, natural and social sciences, policy papers, important statistics, and annual reports. Every effort is made to ensure the currency of the index. For instance, documents appearing in the Checklist of Canadian Government Publications are delivered by Microlog approximately two months after publication of the list.

LANGUAGE POLICY

Documents issued in English or French are indexed and abstracted in the language of publication, while bilingual documents are indexed and abstracted in both languages.

SOURCES AND COVERAGE

Federal Documents: The Microlog editors review all checklists issued by the Canadian Government Publishing Centre and order every document relevant to the service. Except for serials, maps, pamphlets, and manuals, all monographs covered by the Federal Depository Plan are included in the index. Also, a special effort is made to track down elusive but important titles which do not appear in the lists.

Microlog offers a special collection of documents published by the Federal Government but not issued through the Federal Depository Plan. These titles, available to subscribers as the Non-Depository Publications collection, are indicated in the Titles section by a bullet (•). Microlog is also the direct distributing agent for many government bodies.

Provincial Documents: Depository arrangements with several provincial libraries have been established to ensure that Microlog subscribers receive all publications from those provinces. Where no depository arrangement exists, all publications lists issued by the province are reviewed for acquisitions.

Municipal Documents: Since these titles are very difficult to obtain, the Microlog editors make special efforts to include publications from municipal sources.

ACCESS

The Index provides access by subject, corporate or individual author, and series title.

The full Microlog file from 1979 to date, consisting of almost 50,000 records, is available online through Can/OLE. This is an ideal way to locate hard-to-find reports which may then be ordered directly online through the Can/DOCS service. Contact: Can/OLE Client Services, CISTI, Ottawa, Ontario, K1A 0S2.

FEATURES

Microlog comprises the following sections:

1. Titles and abstracts: A full bibliographic citation and a descriptive abstract for each title.
2. Name Index: Access by personal author, corporate author, and conference name.
3. Series Titles: Lists by title and number all reports in series in the service; series are available as an ongoing subscription or retrospective collection.
4. Subject Index: Descriptors based on Library of Congress and Canadiana Subject Headings are assigned to each document. A cross-referencing structure assists searchers.
5. Microfiche collections: Lists contents of each fiche collection for quick reference. These collections can be used as current awareness lists in broad subject areas to notify users of new acquisitions. This section is included in the annual cumulation as a separate ficed product.

MICROLOG AND CANADIAN STATISTICS INDEX

Statistical Material: The Canadian Statistics Index (CSI) provides further access to statistical material contained in Microlog monographs and special or annual reports. The CSI identification number has been included with the Microlog citation for the convenience of subscribers to the CSI fiche collection.

Annual Reports: Storage of annual reports in a single sequence has been a problem for clients in the past. The CSI numbers for annual reports are now listed in the bibliographic citation and appear on the microfiche header of each report, to make such sequencing possible.

DOCUMENT DELIVERY

Institutions may subscribe to complete or partial collections of the documents in Microlog. Individual copies on microfiche or paper reprint may be ordered through Micromedia's Document Delivery Service. To order, please contact:

INTRODUCTION

Microlog: Index de recherche du Canada met à votre disposition toutes les publications du gouvernement et les travaux de recherche difficiles à se procurer. Combiné aux collections sur microfiches, le service Microlog constitue un outil très efficace pour retrouver les publications des différents gouvernements du Canada, ainsi que celles des organismes qui reçoivent des subventions pour la recherche. Microlog est aussi un service de livraison de documents, sur microfiches ou sous forme imprimée.

CONTENU

Microlog contient entre autres des recherches en sciences physiques, naturelles et sociales, des énoncés de politique, des statistiques et des rapports annuels. Par l'intermédiaire du service Microlog, on peut obtenir les documents qui figurent sur la Liste des publications du gouvernement du Canada environ deux mois après leur parution sur cette liste.

POLITIQUE LINGUISTIQUE

Les ouvrages publiés en français ou en anglais sont indexés et résumés dans la langue de publication; les ouvrages bilingues sont traités dans les deux langues.

SOURCES

Publications fédérales: Les rédacteurs de Microlog examinent les listes émises par le Centre d'édition du gouvernement du Canada et commandent les documents pertinents. En dehors des publications en série, cartes, brochures et manuels, toutes les monographies régies par le Programme de dépôt du gouvernement fédéral figurent dans l'index, ainsi que des ouvrages importants ne figurant pas sur les listes.

Microlog propose aussi une collection spéciale de publications fédérales non déposées, identifiées par un point (•) dans la section Titres et résumés. Microlog est aussi l'agent de diffusion de nombreux organismes gouvernementaux.

Publications municipales: Ces ouvrages étant difficiles à se procurer, les rédacteurs de Microlog redoublent d'ardeur pour les inclure dans l'index.

ACCÈS

L'index imprimé est bilingue et les publications sont répertoriées par sujet, par auteur (collectivité et personne physique) et par titre de collection.

Le fichier complet de Microlog, de 1979 à aujourd'hui, contient près de 50,000 notices et est accessible sur

Can/OLE. Il s'agit d'un moyen idéal pour mettre la main sur des rapports difficiles à trouver qu'on peut commander par l'intermédiaire du service Can/DOCS. À ce propos, veuillez vous adresser au Service à la clientèle Can/OLE, ICIST, Ottawa (Ontario), K1A 0S2.

ORGANISATION DE L'INDEX

Microlog est divisé en cinq sections:

1. Titres et résumés: tous les titres sont catalogués et accompagnés d'un résumé descriptif.
2. Index des noms: donne un accès par auteur, collectivité-auteur et titre de conférence.
3. Titres de collections: tous les rapports publiés en série sont classés par titre et numéro. Ces collections peuvent être commandées individuellement.
4. Index des matières: les descripteurs permettent de trouver facilement les publications pertinentes; un réseau de renvois facilite la recherche.
5. Collections de microfiches: chaque collection apparaît dans une section séparée pour faciliter la recherche. Ces listes peuvent aussi servir à renseigner les usagers sur les nouveautés. Dans la refonte, cette section est insérée sous forme de microfiches.

MICROLOG ET L'INDEX DES STATISTIQUES DU CANADA

Données statistiques: L'Index des statistiques du Canada (CSI) constitue une autre source de référence sur les statistiques contenues dans certaines publications indexées dans Microlog. Celles-ci ont un numéro d'ordre spécial qui est inclus dans la référence bibliographique.

Rapports annuels: Afin de rendre le classement des rapports annuels plus facile, le numéro d'ordre CSI correspondant à ces documents figure maintenant dans les références bibliographiques et est inscrit sur les en-têtes de microfiches.

LIVRAISON DE DOCUMENTS

On peut s'abonner à l'ensemble ou à certaines des collections de documents de Microlog. On peut également commander des reproductions de documents sur microfiches ou sur papier par l'intermédiaire du service de livraison de documents de Micromedia. Pour commander, communiquer avec:

Sample CRI Search

'How can a person from a foreign country qualify for refugee status in Canada?'

The researcher can search in CRI as in any library catalogue - by subject, author and title.

Because the index is bilingual, searching can be done in English or in French.

Recherche type avec IRC

'Comment une personne d'un pays étranger peut-elle demander le statut de réfugié au Canada?'

La méthode de recherche dans IRC est la même que dans une bibliothèque, puisque les documents sont indexés par auteur, par sujet et par titre. L'index étant bilingue, la consultation peut se faire en français ou en anglais.

STEP 2/DEUXIÈME ÉTAPE

A unified search strategy

The search strategy should include all the monthly issues. Start with the most recent issue and work back. Monthly issues are cumulated annually.

Établir une stratégie de recherche unifiée

La stratégie de recherche doit tenir compte de toutes les publications mensuelles, à commencer par les plus récentes. Chaque année, ces publications font l'objet d'une refonte.

STEP 3/TROISIÈME ÉTAPE

Retrieve the publication

Each bibliographic citation gives a full description of the relevant document. Locate the document by the microfiche number in the library's collection or order from Micromedia. Individual publications are available for purchase on microfiche or paper. The bibliographic description provides publisher source information.

Repérer la publication

Chaque notice bibliographique comprend une description complète du document; celui-ci peut être repéré grâce au numéro de microfiche de la bibliothèque; sinon, il faut le commander à Micromedia. On peut se procurer les monographies sur microfiches ou sur papier. La description bibliographique comporte également des indications sur l'éditeur.

10 point innovation checklist

Ottawa : Canada Mortgage & Housing Corporation, 1994. 64 p. : ill., Bibl. French ed. (10 Étapes de l'innovation) : 96-03139/1. ISBN 0-660-15793-4 CCG-P no. NH15-100/1994E MICROLOG 96-03417 (1 fiche)

This guide is intended to help those developing innovations related to the housing and building sector. It provides a ten-point exercise for evaluating the innovative idea for its feasibility and potential profitability in the market. These points include assessing the competition, assessing the performance of the innovation, researching certification requirements, field testing, examining environmental impacts, investigating patent protection, considering the complexities of manufacturing, estimating investment requirements, surveying consumer reaction, and predicting profitability. If the innovation seems marketable, the subsequent sections of the guide contain advice on developing a business plan and entering the marketplace. The appendix contains information on obtaining patents and on sources of assistance.

The Canadian Urban Transit Association has organised a process involving technical workshops and discussions which has resulted in the identification, prioritisation, and articulation of research and development needs of the Canadian transit industry. This document describes the process followed to identify the industry's priority research needs, lists these research topics, and provides individual research problem statements for each of those topics. In addition to the discussion of the problem, each statement includes relevant research proposals. The research problem statements are presented under the following headings: strategic management, marketing, fares, transit planning, human resources, operations and maintenance systems, and equipment.

To the Minister of Transport. Ottawa : National Transportation Agency of Canada, 1995. iii, 57 p. : Maps French ed. (Examen des embranchements, 1995...) : 96-03811/1.
MICROLOG 96-03832 (1 fiche)

Presents the methodology and findings of a review of the full economic costs to the grain handling and transportation system of retaining or abandoning a number of light steel and low-volume Prairie grain branch lines. The analysis was to determine which lines should be identified for abandonment under a fast-track process. The investigators determined economic costs by analysing four elements of the Prairie grain handling and transportation, including the rail, trucking, elevation, and road sectors, by: identifying the delivery points and elevators on designated branch lines; estimating their current volume of grain traffic; identifying a set of viable alternate delivery points on adjacent rail lines; and quantifying the workload and cost differentials of road, rail, trucking, and elevation operations which could be expected if growers began to truck the equivalent volumes to alternate elevators. Seventeen branch line segments totalling 535 miles were submitted for review. The appendices include data on delivery points and grain traffic, and descriptions of the branch lines under review.

Custom furniture used in Saskatchewan nursing homes and seniors' residences is generally sturdy and functional in appearance, but often uncomfortable and unattractive. This report presents results of a project to design, build, and evaluate a standard complement of typical nursing/senior home furnishings made by Saskatchewan manufacturers using Saskatchewan white birch hardwood and plywood. Working drawings are included for chairs, tables, a chest, and a bed. The report also includes a copy of the furniture evaluation questionnaire sent to staff of St Mary's Villa in Humboldt, with their responses. Appendices include a directory of accessible furniture manufacturers and reproductions of texts on anthropometrics and 19th-century furniture design.

Agencies, boards and commissions, the administrative justice system in Nova Scotia : discussion paper

Halifax : Law Reform Commission of Nova Scotia, 1996. xv, 76 p.
MICROLOG 96-03881 (2 fiche)

Organisations known by such designations as agencies, boards, commissions, councils, societies, committees, and even corporations may be authorised by the government to make final decisions which can affect people's equality, property and political rights, and their economic and social entitlements. In Nova Scotia, there are at least 300 such administrative tribunals, the members of which often are part-time, untrained and unfamiliar with administrative law practices. Few tribunals publish rules of practice and there is no central repository for their rules, decisions, and other directives they may issue. In response to such concerns, the province requested the Law Reform Commission of Nova Scotia to review the administrative justice system in the province and make recommendations for reform. This discussion paper outlines the administrative justice system in Nova Scotia and some general concepts and principles for reform, in order to foster public discussion and input to the Commission's drafting of a new Administrative Justice Act. The paper contains suggestions for practices that should be followed by decision makers when they are making decisions which might characterise them as a tribunal, and suggestions for reform of the law and of the system governing judicial review and statutory appeals.

Estimation of reduced visibilities due to aerosols or hydrosols has been very crude or non-existent, in part due to the complex and computationally inefficient codes required to estimate the extinction. The work reported in this paper overcomes both these restrictions. The paper presents analytic approximations to the extinction efficiency ( $\text{Qext}$ ) for oriented and randomly oriented circular infinite cylinders, based on anomalous diffraction, and compares the results with the exact code. The results are further generalised to randomly oriented elliptical cylinders. Using the formulas presented,  $\text{Qext}$  can be evaluated over 10,000 times faster than using the exact code, allowing for exploration and rapid computation of the effects of varying size distributions and material properties of randomly oriented cylindrical particles on the performance of obscurants and on electromagnetic propagation in general. The accuracy and limitations of the formulas are discussed.

Presents results of a study of the effects of cultural and environmental factors on the survival, growth, and development of white spruce and lodgepole pine crop trees, deciduous competing vegetation, and herbaceous competing vegetation. The data were collected during the summers of 1992 and 1993 from 28 research microsite projects in Alberta. Controlled factors included type of mechanical site preparation, microsite planting position, planting stock type, and planting date. Response variables include various measures of crop tree survival, final size, and rate of growth; deciduous tree competitors; and shrub, forb, and grass competition. Analytical methods used include contingency table analyses, multivariate analyses of variance, multiple linear regression analyses, and a variety of exploratory graphic methods. The results indicate the influence of microsite position, stock type, and planting season on the performance of crop trees and competing vegetation.

Measurements are taken on a site-specific basis for certain physical, chemical, and biological characteristics of British Columbia water bodies. Water quality objectives are set based on variable levels which will protect the most sensitive designated use of a water body, and there are currently a number of these objectives which are defined numerically with an average value usually meant to be representative of a 30-day period. Current sampling procedures call for sample collection to occur on a minimum of five days equally spaced within a 30-day period to obtain an average representative 30-day period. This report examines this approach to determine whether it suitably represents a 30-day period. It presents results from a sampling program run at four sites on the Fraser River North Arm. All variables were measured every day for 30 days, and four variables were statistically analysed by comparing five-day sample means to 30-day sample means. Analysis of faecal coliform data was restricted to analysis of variance. Includes recommendations if further consideration is to be given to testing of the sampling approach.

The International Union of Radioecologists has compiled a very large database of soil-to-plant transfer factors, also called CR values. These factors are the ratios of the radionuclide concentrations in dry plants divided by the corresponding concentrations in dry soil to a specified depth or thickness. CR values are empirical and are considered element-specific. This report describes the methodology and presents the results of a project that obtained the most recent version of the Union's database, removed data not relevant to Canadian conditions, summarised the data in a way that would be useful to Canadian users, and developed a simple model to interpolate data to the fullest possible spectrum of crops and soil conditions encountered in Canada. Tabulated CR values are presented for radionuclides of such elements as cesium, strontium, uranium, and cobalt, for such classes of crops as cereals, forage, roots, and vegetables. Correction factors are provided to facilitate interpolation among soil conditions.

Are we becoming two societies? Income polarization and the myth of the declining middle class in Canada

This book examines the public perception that Canada is becoming a society where incomes are becoming increasingly polarised and the middle class is vanishing. The basic objectives of the book are to review the basic evidence on income polarisation among families and on income changes in the Canadian middle class, especially in the 1980s; to examine the distributional effect of income taxes and the distribution of disposable income over 1971-92; and to investigate any impact of increased polarisation on economic insecurity among Canadian families. The book begins with an examination of the background evidence on income inequality in the United States and Canada, and trends in income distribution in Canada. The next two chapters study individual incomes and family incomes, and the final chapter examines the distributional effect of the increased personal income tax burden. The book considers the extent to which observed changes in income polarisation have essentially been driven by cyclical factors in the labour market or whether there is an ongoing underlying trend so that the changes are likely to persist. The appendix contains a discussion of the measurement of income inequality and polarisation, as well as comments on the rest of the book.

The purpose of this assessment was to evaluate what impact, if any, different distributions of growth (population and jobs) would have on the wastewater servicing requirements of the Ottawa-Carleton region. The assessment was performed through the development and analysis of nine development alternatives. Major subsystems of the wastewater system were examined separately: the urban core, suburban systems, the Pickard Environmental Centre wastewater treatment plant, and the rural area. The assessment identified and categorised system expansion or upgrades required to support the development as follows: common needs, found with all scenarios; and focus-based needs specific to individual focuses. Alternative solutions were evaluated for each deficiency with the overall objective of identifying the necessary infrastructure in the most cost-efficient and environmentally sensitive manner possible.

The assessment evaluates infrastructure needs as well as the impacts of this infrastructure on the regional natural environment, economy, and communities, for nine growth scenarios with a balanced employment option. Two of these scenarios are assessed considering a trend-based employment option.

Baseline thematic mapping using LANDSAT thematic mapper imagery of the Cariboo Region, British Columbia

By Dennis Jaques. Victoria : Ministry of Environment, Lands & Parks, 1994. i, 33 p.
MICROLOG 96-03857 (1 fiche)

Presents results of a LANDSAT thematic mapping study of the Cariboo region, the purpose of which was to evaluate the usefulness of current LANDSAT imagery for providing up-to-date and detailed mapping of vegetation for regional planning purposes. Begins with a description of imagery used, classification methods, and use of ground truth data. Results and discussion of the final classification indicate the accuracy of the remote sensing method for classifying various types of ground cover and of forest, agriculture, rangeland, and wetland land use types.

Basic studies of the interaction of molecules with surfaces, I : the interaction of phosphate esters with polycarbonates, final report

By R.P. Underhill. Medicine Hat, AB : National Defence, Defence Research Establishment Suffield, 1995. ix, 221 p. : ill., Bibl. (DRES contractor report / Defence Research Establishment Suffield ; CR 95-15)
MICROLOG 96-03760 (3 fiche)

This report describes an investigation into the interaction between chemical agent simulants (some methyl phosphonates and a fluorophosphate) and polycarbonate, using modern surface analytical techniques and molecular modelling. The goal of the project was to determine the utility of these methods for studying the basic agent-polymer interaction. Investigative techniques used included attenuated total reflection, photoacoustic spectroscopy, and X-ray photoelectron spectroscopy. Both quantum chemical and molecular mechanics calculations were used to model the systems under investigation. The latter was used to reveal the structure of the polymer and the polymer-agent complex, to explain the shift in the C=O stretch frequency of the carbonate group when the polycarbonate was exposed to the methyl phosphonates, and to explain qualitatively the mode of interaction of the different simulants with the plastic.

Ontario Public School Boards' Assn. Toronto : The Assn, 1993. 45 p. ONTERIS ON07954
MICROLOG 96-03726 (1 fiche)

Represents a review of the Act (Bill 100) resulting from an extensive consultation process with Ontario Public School Boards' Association (OPSBA) member boards. Bill 100 has provided, for the past 17 years, for a process of collective bargaining between boards of education and teachers and has generally served the parties well. This document is intended to identify the mandated process under Bill 100, identify areas of concern and recommend alternatives to facilitate collective bargaining under the Act. Presents the history of Bill 100, and covers: legislated time frame and process; responsibility for collective bargaining; fact finding; strikes and lockouts; principals in the bargaining unit; duty to bargain in good faith, work to rule, and final offer selection. Includes a summary of recommendations.

Bill C-68 : submission

Saskatchewan All Party Delegation : to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. Regina : The Delegation, 1995. 30 p. : Bibl.
MICROLOG 96-03579 (1 fiche)

The centrepiece of the federal Bill C-68 is the introduction of a system of universal licensing of firearms owners and universal registration of firearms. The Bill further proposes new minimum sentences for certain firearms-related crimes, new offences aimed at arms trafficking and smuggling, imposition of new regulatory offences, and outright banning of broad categories of firearms. This report presents the reactions to the provisions of Bill C-68 by an all-party delegation of the Saskatchewan legislature, focusing on the opposition to the firearms licensing and registration aspects of the Bill. These are criticised with regard to the absence of a link to public safety and reduction of crime, as well as the regulatory and financial burden of the Bill. A separate part of the report reviews the importance of firearms as tools in Saskatchewan for hunters, farmers, and Aboriginals. The appendix lists specific concerns regarding the Bill C-68 provisions.

The Health Act requires the Provincial Health Officer to report annually on the health of British Columbians. In this report for 1995, the health of the people of British Columbia is assessed, using the most recent data available, most of which are for 1994. A special focus of this year's report is the health of women. Chapter 2 provides an overview of the health of British Columbians, as well as the major factors which influence health: living and working conditions, individual skills and choices, the natural environment, and health services. Chapter 3 describes the health of women in British Columbia. Topics included in this feature report are: living and working conditions; violence; substance misuse; mental health; reproductive health; and chronic diseases. For each topic in this year's report, suggested objectives or actions are identified. Data sources and notes are included in the appendices, as are the names and boundaries for the twenty health regions. An index is also included.

The British Columbia water quality index reduces technical water quality information to a simple description of the state of water quality. The index ranks water quality into one of five categories, each describing the state of water quality compared to objectives that usually represent the natural state. The index can be used to describe the state of water quality as a whole in a body of water, and also shows the suitability of water for various uses such as drinking, recreation, and agriculture. This document is a guide to those who wish to gain a basic understanding of how the water quality index works. It includes the meaning of each water quality ranking, steps to follow in calculating the index, and information on provincial setting of water quality objectives and on application of the water quality index.

Over the past two decades, the British Columbia construction system and Building Code have stretched beyond their traditional scope to accommodate a wide range of new issues and new technologies. As a result, the building regulatory system has become increasingly complex and more difficult to understand and administer. This report outlines a number of specific actions intended to strengthen the system. These actions were formulated from a review process that included input from the building industry, government, and the public. The actions and the reasons for them are discussed in the following categories: definition of roles and responsibilities; development of a manual of practice; implementation of a uniform building code throughout the province; improvement of consistency in interpreting and applying the code; development and implementation of a new building code review process; creation of a housing code; development and implementation of a product approval process; establishment of a public awareness program; training and certification programs; and creation of new safety legislation.

The Northwest Territories Business Incentive Policy (BIP) was first adopted in 1984 and was originally intended to provide territorial-owned and operated businesses with financial compensation for the higher cost of operating in the north. Since then, accusations have been made over the years that the BIP had become administratively cumbersome, bureaucratic, vulnerable to political influence, and ineffective in advancing the goals of promoting northern and local business development and employment. This document reports on the territorial government's interdepartmental review of the policy and the resulting recommendations for BIP reform, or alternate solutions, in the following areas of concern: business incentives, labour incentives, local business preference, and policy simplification. The document also describes the consultation process conducted to determine how the BIP could be improved, and summarises the responses from the public to various questions related to the BIP.

Can a robust delay test be non-robust?

A synchronous circuit may be affected by a delay fault. The problem of delay fault detection inevitably involves modelling of the behaviour of affected circuits. It is commonly accepted that a single delay fault can be detected by any pair of input vectors which propagate a particular transition along the affected path. If such a pair detects the fault it targets regardless of the presence of other delay faults in the circuit under test, it is called a robust test. However, recent research implies that some common assumptions regarding delay fault detection do not hold in real complementary metal oxide semiconductor (CMOS) circuits. This paper presents an example of a test considered to be robust, but which fails to detect the fault it targets. The paper also shows that test robustness can fail even for relatively large delay faults in CMOS circuits.

This commentary analyses economic issues pertaining to the proposed 1997 revisions of the Canadian Bank Act and related legislation. It begins by discussing the principal economic forces shaping today's financial industry, including integration, segmentation, and organisational change. This is followed by an outline of how strategic issues are likely to be viewed from the differing perspectives of management, supervisory authorities, monetary authorities, system clients, and shareholders. The commentary then reviews theoretical aspects of the banking reform issues considered, including types of financial dealings; size, cost, and profit functions; asset concentration and competition; and factors to be considered in the transition to reform, including the international context, encouraging competitiveness, and the current framework of Canada's financial industry (including banks and insurance firms). Issues relating to implementation of reform are also discussed: business powers, access to payments mechanisms, consumer asset insurance, and disclosure. The commentary concludes with recommended policy options.

This study was initiated to characterize shallow groundwater dynamics in the Catamaran Brook basin. The primary objective is to quantify groundwater recharge, discharge & chemistry prior to, during & following timber harvest. The cutting of large areas of forest allows a higher percentage of precipitation to reach the surface, & decreases evapotranspiration. Timber harvest also results in higher summer soil temperatures & increased soil microbial activity. Groundwater discharge has an effect on fish habitat & production. This report describes groundwater field activities & results for the year.

This report extends the authors' earlier analysis of rural Saskatchewan 1961-90 to the 1990-95 period, when major changes occurred in the economic and institutional environments occasioned by the rapid movement toward much freer trade, coupled with a dramatic shift in the fiscal framework of governments at all levels. The report begins with a review of the history of rural Saskatchewan from the late 19th century settlements, through infrastructure upgrading and prosperity of the post-war years, to economic decline in the 1960s and 1970s. The report then analyses the evolution of the province's trade-centre system through the 1990s. It discusses the conceptual framework for the analysis, based on central place theory, and the data sources and cluster analysis methodology used. The analysis begins by comparing the number of communities in each functional classification, 1961-95, and then discusses factors contributing to the trade centre system evolution: urbanisation, downward filtering, community changes. The final section focuses on identifying and interpreting relative changes among trade centre levels and shifts of communities between functional categories.

This field guide is a synthesis of available knowledge for use in assessment of risk and probable impact of pollution by suspended sediment in salmon and trout streams. Although the synthesis was developed in British Columbia for use in helping the planning phase of instream works where there is a threat of pollution by suspended sediment, and for assisting field investigations and prosecutions based on water samples collected during a pollution event, the guide has broad geographic relevance and the models described should apply in general to salmon and trout species in hilly countries with cool-water stream systems throughout the world. The knowledge contained in this guide is presented as mathematical models applicable to different life-history phases of salmonid fishes. Sections of the guide discuss concepts of dose and response, sediment concentration effects, ill effects of sediment pollution, response models in habitat protection and pollution prevention (in the context of water quality criteria, water quality objectives, and the Canada Fisheries Act), instructions for generating dose-response data and for using a dose-response matrix, field data collection methods, and terminology.

Civilian non-combatants fearing persecution in civil war situations : guidelines issued by the chairperson pursuant to Section 65(3) of the Immigration Act

Canada. Immigration & Refugee Board. Ottawa : The Board, 1996. 32, 36 p. Bilingual (Civis non combattants...).
MICROLOG 96-03540 (1 fiche)

Claims made by civilian non-combatants fearing return to situations of civil war come before the Refugee Division on a regular basis. These guidelines address the particular difficulties raised in such claims. In claims involving situations of civil war, as in all other refugee claims, the claimants must satisfy all of the elements of the statutory definition of Convention refugee. A major difficulty encountered in analysing these claims is determining whether or not a linkage exists between the persecution feared and one or more of the Convention grounds.

La Section du statut de réfugié est régulièrement saisie de revendications présentées par des civils non combattants qui craignent de retourner dans des pays où la guerre civile fait rage. Ces directives portent sur les difficultés particulières que présentent de telles revendications. Les personnes qui présentent ces revendications doivent, comme toutes celles qui demandent le statut de réfugié, remplir toutes les conditions énoncées dans la définition légale de réfugié au sens de la convention. Dans l'analyse de ces revendications, une des principales difficultés est de démontrer l'existence d'un lien entre la persécution redoutée et l'un ou plusieurs des motifs énoncés dans la Convention. La proposition générale suivante sert de fondement à l'analyse des questions à régler dans les revendications liées à la guerre civile.

This publication provides advice to those who have experienced water damage as a result of plumbing leaks, major spills, flooding, or sewer back-ups. As each of these conditions causes materials to become damp or wet, and therefore susceptible to microbial attack, much of the advice is concerned with preventing or reducing health hazards resulting from microbial (moulds and bacteria) contamination. After general sections on flood problems, examining and decontaminating the house, and cleaning the house, the publication provides specific advice on cleaning or salvaging appliances and electrical equipment, furniture, bedding, fabric and clothes, and paper goods. The central objective of this report is to review the Forest Practices Code of British Columbia and numerous other forest practice codes, rules, regulations, and so forth which exist in national and state (or provincial) jurisdictions throughout the world. The purpose is to provide information to code administrators and implementers so that they can identify possible omissions or weaknesses in the code and begin the ongoing process of change and improvement in order for the code to reflect current knowledge. Foreign jurisdictions selected for the study included the United Kingdom, Sweden, Finland, Germany, and states or provinces of the United States, Australia, and Germany. The first part of the report reviews the legal and administrative settings of the codes or regulations examined, including legal framework, authority, incentives, penalties and enforcement, appeals, audits, performance bonds, public input, and worker safety. The second part reviews code provisions on such forest practices as planning, road engineering, site preparation, silviculture prescriptions, species selection, wilderness management, fire management, stocking standards, and soil conservation. The Copepod Spyriion lumpi (Kroyer) as a biological marker in population studies of the deepwater redfish (Sebastes mentella)

Spyriion lumpi (Kroyer), a parasitic copepod of the Spyriidae family, is fairly widespread in North Atlantic fish species. The copepod is characterised by its mode of attachment to the host. Copepod females become embedded in fish muscles and a fairly large connective-tissue capsule forms around the copepod cephalothorax, remaining on the body of the fish even after the parasite dies. The remaining capsule contains the decomposed tissue of the copepod and marks the fish for life. Studies reported in the literature have used the copepod as a natural marker in fish population surveys. This paper reports on a study undertaken to investigate the possibility of using S. lumpi in population surveys of one of the most widely distributed species of the North Atlantic, the deepwater redfish Sebastes mentella Travin, 1951. The investigators collected redfish specimens from the 50-350 meter layer during 1980-82 within the area of 55-61 north latitude and 30-39 west longitude. The paper discusses results in terms of dynamics of redfish infestation according to fish sex, age, season, water depth, and geographical area.

This study presents the findings from focus groups that were held across Canada in order to identify issues of concern and features which customers wished to see in conventional transit buses. Eight sessions were held with frequent riders, four with non-frequent riders, and four with persons having physical limitations. Further information was obtained from a written survey given to group participants and from discussions held with bus manufacturers. The sessions were organised to reflect the customer's experience with the bus, and the study identifies a variety of issues related to such matters as boarding, sitting or standing, comfort, alighting, and route information. The study recommends seven areas for research or action: addressing boarding and alighting needs, improving seating, enhancing climate control, improving stop announcements, educating customers, developing a market research approach, and incorporating human factor concerns into bus procurement. The appendices contain the materials used in structuring the focus groups and the results of the written survey.

In summer 1993, several 20-25 year old plantations of white spruce in New Brunswick were heavily damaged by the budmoth species Zeiraphera unfortunana (the purple striped shootworm). This insect, while never having been a major pest in unmanaged stands, now appears to have reached pest status in plantations. The basic biology, population dynamics, and the damage the pest causes have not been determined. To address this deficiency, the University of New Brunswick Faculty of Forestry and Environmental Management conducted a study, reported in this paper, that investigated the feeding behaviour and type of damage caused by Z. unfortunana larvae feeding on white spruce. The study also determined the basic life history of the insect as well as the relationship between larval density and defoliation, and between larval density and shoot length reduction. Study methodology included laboratory and field experiments.

Describes the development of an advanced prototype of a wood hardness tester for use in determining the degree of decay in aspen. The operation of the device is based on measurement of the penetration depth of a spring-loaded needle into fresh or frozen wood. An electronic readout displays the depth of needle penetration, which can then be extrapolated to determine wood hardness, which is an indicator of the type and extent of decay. Results of testing of the prototype are also reported, including a comparison of the performance of the prototype with a previously developed tester called the hardness gun.

In New Brunswick, the wood supply component of forest management planning has been primarily based on softwood species under even-aged silvicultural strategies involving clear-cutting, planting, precommercial thinning, or natural stand development. A shift to include other species, silvicultural treatments, and stand structures is now needed, requiring the development of acceptable yield curves. This report describes a project conducted to initiate such development. Specific objectives included identification of priority silvicultural practices and stand conditions requiring yield curves, and development of acceptable curves for the conditions and practices identified in a manner consistent with current wood supply planning practices. Forestry licensees identified a wide range of intervention scenarios requiring yield curves, and six scenarios were selected as having the greatest priority for the 1995 management planning session. The yield curve solution strategy included development of multivariate equations that modify untreated stand yield curves on a relative basis. The FIBER program was chosen to simulate growth and yield for all six intervention scenarios. The report discusses the implications of each intervention scenario equation developed, with respect to predicted growth responses and basal area yield, and presents outcomes of example silvicultural prescriptions.

Toronto : Ontario Public School Boards' Assn, 1995. 12 p. : ill. ONTERIS ON0807

This document argues that the conception of education as over-governed and expensive is false, and that the public actually prefers one school system in a community to the merging of neighbouring boards. It cites recent Ontario studies on problems with amalgamation and examines school board amalgamation in Alberta and Saskatchewan, comparing the situations in these provinces with that in Ontario. It then examines whether amalgamation will save money, notes the complexity of the amalgamation process, and notes the need to explore other avenues of cost savings. The appendix includes relevant extracts from a report of the Royal Commission on Learning.

By Richard Barry and Edgar Robichaud. Fredericton : Dept. of Natural Resources ; Natural Resources Canada, Maritimes Region, 1994. 63 p. : ill., Bibl. MICROLOG 96-03961 (1 fiche)

This document reports on the observations made during three sapflow seasons in a study of the effects of fertilisation on maple sugar production in a New Brunswick stand of sugar maples. The objectives of the study were to evaluate the effects of seven combinations of fertilisers on daily and seasonal sugar production parameters (sapflow, sap sugar content, and sugar production, i.e. sapflow times sugar content). In addition, some hydrometeorological information (air and soil temperature, precipitation, soil moisture regime) were collected during the sapflow season. Data analysis included averaging of sugar production from five replicate trees to establish a regression equation with the average of the control trees for each season of the study. The regression equations established for after-treatment seasons were compared to the one obtained before treatment with a slope comparison t-test procedure. Changes in either the slope or intercept of these equations after treatment reflected the positive or negative effects of the treatments on the sugar production parameters.

Effects upon the water quality of Ross Creek and Schist Lake induced by discharges from the City of Flin Flon sewage treatment facility

By A.E. Beck. Winnipeg : Manitoba Environment, 1995. x, 106 p. : ill., Maps (Report / Manitoba. Manitoba Environment ; no. 95-09) MICROLOG 96-03558 (2 fiche)

The Flin Flon city sewage treatment facility, constructed in 1951, does not treat sewage to minimal standards required of most other municipal jurisdictions in Manitoba. Concerns regarding the condition of the facility, the quality of its effluent, and the effects of that effluent on the environment led to the formation of a working group to study those issues. This report documents the results of the working group's study of the environmental impacts of Flin Flon sewage disposal practices on Schist Lake, located downstream from the city. The study involved defining the quality of the treatment facility effluent, of the receiving water upstream and downstream of the facility's discharge, and of a relatively pristine area of Schist Lake, and by determining through comparisons the extent and severity of impact upon the local receiving environment. The investigators collected a series of five sets of water samples from 29 locations on a seasonal basis between June 1994 and April 1995. Samples were analysed for 35 water quality variables. Includes glossary.

Canadian Urban Transit Assn. Transit/Environment Task Force. Toronto : The Assn, 1990. ill. 26 p. : ill.
MICROLOG 96-03647 (1 fiche)

Transportation vehicles are the most significant sources of carbon monoxide, lead, and hydrocarbon emissions in the air. While technical improvements will significantly reduce these emissions in the future, it is clear that reliance on private automobiles must be reduced, both to reduce air pollution and to relieve congestion in cities. This paper examines the magnitude and gravity of urban air pollution problems and the current contributions of public transit versus the motor vehicle to the quality of urban areas. Benefits of transit are discussed with regard to air pollution reduction, energy savings, and improvements in quality of life. The paper also reviews current federal, provincial, regional, and municipal initiatives and strategies for expanding the role of transit to achieve further improvements in the quality of urban areas. It presents a summary of the potential savings which would result from a 5% shift in favour of transit during the daily peak travel period for Metropolitan Toronto, Montreal, and Vancouver, as well as a portrait of what Canada's three largest centres would be like if they had not invested historically in public transit.

Providing for the health and comfort of bus drivers should be an important consideration if drivers are expected to fulfil their important role as customer agents, and this concern should be reflected in the design of the driver's workstation area. This report presents results from a comprehensive ergonomic study of the bus driver's workstation that included the following tasks: an extensive review of relevant literature; field observations and driver interviews to define driver tasks; seat vibration tests carried out at a test track facility and during street operations; computer-based simulation analysis of the seat-pedal-steering system that would maximise the percentage of the target driver population that would be comfortably accommodated; development of a wide variety of design concepts for enhancing the driver's workstation; and some initial validation of these concepts via construction of a mock-up and holding workshops with transit staff, drivers, and manufacturers to solicit their comments. The tasks provide a comprehensive look at the very complex issues involved in designing an enhanced driver's workstation. The final chapter identifies seven areas where more research or development is needed.

Models used to simulate environmental transfer of radionuclides typically include many parameters, the values of which are uncertain. This paper reviews difference methods to quantify the uncertainty in the prediction by propagating parameter uncertainties. A statistical approach using random sampling techniques is recommended for complex models with many uncertain parameters. In this approach, the probability density function of the model output is obtained from multiple realisations of the model according to a multivariate random sample of the different input parameters. Sampling efficiency can be improved using a stratified scheme, and sample size can be restricted when statistical tolerance limits need to be estimated. The paper also reviews methods to rank parameters according to their contribution to uncertainty in the model prediction, and recommends measures of sensitivity, correlation, and regression coefficients that can be calculated on values of input and output variables generated during the propagation of uncertainties through the model. Finally, the report presents a parameter uncertainty analysis for the CHERPAC food chain model which estimates subjective confidence limits and intervals on the predictions. A sensitivity analysis is also carried out using partial rank correlation coefficients.

Cette étude sur la demande d'eau figure au nombre des études à réaliser en vue de l'élaboration d'un Plan directeur à long terme des eaux et des eaux usées pour la Municipalité régionale d'Ottawa-Carleton. Cette étude a pour but d'analyser les dossiers historiques sur la production et la consommation d'eau et d'élaborer des scénarios illustrant la demande projetée d'eau en nous appuyant sur une interprétation judicieuse des politiques pertinentes, la possibilité d'économies reliées à la valorisation de l'eau, la modification de certaines utilisations du sol et l'évolution des tendances socio-économiques. Ce document résume certaines constatations clés de l'étude, dont les résultats de la modélisation.

Étude sur le changement modal en faveur du transport en commun : rapport sommaire

Par UMA Engineering Ltd... et al. Toronto : Assn canadienne du transport urbain, 1992. 27 p. : ill. MICROLOG 96-03645 (1 fiche)

Les réseaux canadiens de transport en commun partagent les préoccupations du public en ce qui touche les questions d'environnement et les embarras de circulation dans les centres urbains du Canada. Le but de cette étude est d'examiner de plus près le marché canadien du transport urbain, en vue d'établir quelles améliorations au service de transport en commun, au mode d'aménagement du territoire et à d'autres facteurs, associées à l'appui des gouvernements, du monde des affaires et des particuliers, seraient les plus susceptibles d'augmenter la part du marché dévolue aux transports collectifs.

Cette étude examine, d'un point de vue des gestionnaires de réseaux de transport en commun, les exigences et pratiques qui pourraient contribuer à prolonger l'intégrité structurale des autobus urbains. Cette étude comprend plusieurs activités de recherche : une étude approfondie de la littérature; un examen de l'ampleur du problème à partir de discussions avec des représentants de réseaux de transport en commun et de manufacturiers d'autobus; l'élaboration d'une définition normalisée du concept de défectuosité structurale; un examen des pratiques courantes en ce qui concerne les spécifications; et des visites sur place d'un certain nombre de centres d'essais, de recherche, et de fabrication au Canada et aux Etats-Unis.

Cette étude porte sur les perspectives du marché des nouveaux médias d'apprentissage (NMA), tant du point de vue de l'offre que de la demande. Avec pour objectif des liens plus étroits entre les entreprises canadiennes qui conçoivent et offrent des NMA et les industries qui utilisent ces produits et services, elle vise, par surcroît, des solutions novatrices pour combler les besoins de l'industrie en matière d'emploi et de formation. Elle a principalement trois objectifs : comprendre et évaluer le marché éventuel des NMA et, par le fait même, offrir aux fournisseurs et aux utilisateurs des renseignements plus justes sur ce marché ainsi que conseiller le gouvernement fédéral afin de l'aider à préciser son rôle pour favoriser l'essor du secteur des NMA; accroître le fond de connaissances sur l'industrie canadienne des didacticiels et sur les possibilités connexes; et, favoriser ainsi l'établissement de liens nouveaux entre le secteur des NMA et les secteurs industriels à croissance rapide.

An Evaluation framework for natural areas in the Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton

By Vivian R. Brownell and Brendon M. Larson. Ottawa : Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton, Planning & Property Dept., 1995. 2 v. : Bibl. Contents: Vol. 1 : Report - vol. 2 : Technical appendices. On cover: Planning our region, Ottawa-Carleton regional plan review. MICROLOG 96-03763 (3 fiche)

A Natural Environment System Strategy was initiated in 1993 as part of the Regional Official Plan Review process for Ottawa-Carleton. The main objective of the Strategy is to work towards the long-term maintenance of biodiversity, ecosystems, and ecological processes in the Ottawa-Carleton region in order to ensure a healthy living environment for residents. It is proposed that the best way to accomplish this objective is to maintain a system of well-connected natural areas. This report presents a complete process for the evaluation of natural areas in the region, including: selection of initial candidate core areas and linkages; gap analysis; additional information retrieval; and quality assessment of core natural areas and linkages. The report clearly defines the parameters and explains the various steps required to complete each portion of the process. It proposes evaluation and field methodologies based on a review of existing literature and previous studies, and also on test applications in three potential core natural areas and two potential linkages on public lands in the region. Appendices include a review of field data sheets used in recent inventories of natural areas, pilot study site data summaries, and checklists of plant and animal species found in the region.

A tridem is defined as a group of three axles that are equally spaced and equally share the load. This report describes a project to monitor the operational performance and maintenance requirements of a new tridem tractor designed with stability-enhancing features and used for transportation of logs in the Slave Lake region of Alberta. Tests of the tractor included both normal operation in a single-articulated combination (with a pole trailer) over forest roads in both wet and dry conditions, as well as a series of controlled steering response and traction tests to compare the performance of two- and three-drive axle log haul tractors in combination with a tandem axle pole trailer under three different load conditions. Additional tests compared the tractive ability of a tridem drive axle tractor with a conventional tandem drive unit. Recommendations are made regarding the suitability of tridem drive tractors for log hauling applications in Alberta for combinations similar to those evaluated during this project.

This report evaluates the present criteria for harvesting in tolerant hardwood and mixedwood stands on New Brunswick Crown land to determine their effect on establishment and development of natural hardwood regeneration and on residual stand quality. Study methods included a combination of collection and analysis of field data, comparison with other partial cutting systems, interviews with specialists and those involved in development and implementation of harvest prescriptions, and a search of pertinent literature. The main body of the report provides data summaries and discussion on a regional basis. Data include composition of residual stand, regeneration response by species (sugar maple, yellow birch, beech, red maple, softwood, intolerant species), name of tallest commercial hardwood, shrub competition species, and overtopping competition species. Appendices include ecodistrict and soil information, summaries of residual stand quality and damage, and a glossary.

The main objective of this study is to evaluate the grade yields and mechanical properties of Norway spruce (Picea abies (L.) Karst.) grown in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. The four samples of Norway spruce trees selected for the study were processed into 530 dry 1x3 dimension lumber pieces. The investigators graded the lumber pieces according to both British and Canadian specifications, and estimated yields for selected visual and machine grades. They tested the pieces to determine their modulus of rupture, modulus of elasticity, and specific gravity. Comparisons were made between wood of two provenances: MS87 (German) and MS85 (Polish), and among lumber obtained from mature and juvenile stands. Comparisons are also presented between the Norway spruce data and spruce-pine-fir lumber data.

Evaluation of spatially referenced video technology for forest database updating

By Kevin Topolinski and Thomas G. Roussel. Edmundston, NB : Fraser, 1994. v, 29 p. : ill. A project supported by Forestry Canada through the Canada/New Brunswick Cooperation Agreement on Forest Development. Source of document: Canadian Forest Service, Maritimes Region. MICROLOG 96-03963 (1 fiche)

Describes a project that tested a method for using spatially referenced video images to update forest harvesting operations in a geographic information system (GIS) database. The investigators mounted a video camera in a helicopter to obtain vertical video images of harvesting blocks. The co-ordinates were supplied using a global positioning system receiver and were imprinted on each video image using a video captioning device. Video images were converted into digital image files using commercially available video capture hardware and software. Images were registered to the GIS database using image manipulation software supplied with the GIS software. Updates to forestry operations could be digitised on screen and embedded into the existing database. The results demonstrate the feasibility of using videography and global positioning technology for forestry applications. Other potential applications of video images are also discussed.

An Evaluation of the economic and market potential for production of dried flowers in Saskatchewan, vol. 1 : evaluation and analysis, final report

Submitted to Saskatchewan Agriculture Development Fund, Dept. of Agriculture and Food, and Saskatchewan Dried Flower Association ; by W.R. Holm and Associates. Regina : Saskatchewan Agriculture & Food, ADF, 1992. xvi, 52 p. : ill., Bibl. MICROLOG 96-03757 (1 fiche)

A wide range of dried flowers and grains is currently produced commercially at a small scale in Saskatchewan, which has a dry climate particularly favourable for production of this commodity. This report presents results of a study to evaluate the economic and market potential for production of dried flowers which are grown, dried, and further processed in Saskatchewan. The study methodology included interviews with Canadian dried flower wholesalers and the six largest importers, manufacturers, and distributors of dried flowers in the United States; a production survey of Saskatchewan growers; and analyses of current price data. The first part of the study presents an overview of the structure and operations of the Saskatchewan dried flower sector, including an assessment of grower costs. The second section reviews the structure, trends, and conduct within the North American dried flower industry. The third section compares grower prices between the Saskatchewan and US markets, discusses the implications for domestic growers, and assesses indicated market opportunities and options. The final section presents a strategic plan to maximise those opportunities for Saskatchewan dried flower producers.

An Evaluation of the economic viability of producing fingerjoined lumber in the Maritime provinces : final report

Prepared for Maritime Lumber Bureau ; by Brudel Corporation. Fredericton : Canadian Forest Service, Maritimes Region, 1991. 52 p. : ill. MICROLOG 96-03975 (1 fiche)

This study investigates issues related to the economic viability of manufacturing fingerjointed studs in the Maritime Provinces. The study begins with an overview of the market opportunities for fingerjointed studs in North America, based on industry interviews, research in trade publications, and interviews with lumber wholesalers. The next chapter analyses the characteristics of raw materials (block ends, shorts) consumed in fingerjointing plants, the manner in which Atlantic sawmills are discarding by-products which could be used in a fingerjointing plant, the difficulties that sawmills may find when trying to extract raw materials from their production lines, the volume of raw material available, and anticipated prices of the raw material. A technical review follows, describing the manufacturing process for fingerjointed studs, quality control requirements, two formats of plant (standalone and adjunct) potentially feasible for the Maritimes region, and the capital cost and labour requirements of a fingerjointing facility. The study ends with a financial analysis of both formats, including capital and operating cost projections, financing and depreciation costs, pro-forma income statements, and sensitivity analyses.

Glass reinforced plastic (GRP) composites are susceptible to fire damage due to the organic matrix materials used in their production. It has been demonstrated that the use of fire retardant additives can improve their overall fire performance without generating excessive smoke and toxicity. A new approach to improve the level of GRP composite fire retardancy consists of adding a protective insulation (fire barrier), providing the possibility of using them in structural applications. This report presents results of fire retardancy tests obtained with intumescence agents, heat reflective additives, and ceramic heat barriers. Initial screening tests were conducted on fire barrier formulations of the following classes: gel coat formulations to be integrally moulded to the structural laminates; top coatings to be applied on existing structural laminates; and formulations reinforced with ceramic fibres, glass fibres, or aluminium-coated glass fibres, to be applied or bonded to existing structural laminates. Final testing was done on seven fire barrier compositions applied on two different base plates or laminate constructions. Final test results reported include deflection under heat, visual appearance after heat exposure, and heat effects on laminate flexural strength.

MAVART (Model to Analyze the Vibrations and Acoustic Radiation of Transducers) is a two-dimensional, axisymmetric, dynamic finite element code whose purpose is to provide a computer-aided design facility for axisymmetric electroacoustic transducers. This manual provides examples of the use of MAVART to aid users in model development and in data input and output interpretation, to provide comprehensive new user training, to exercise and demonstrate all features and elements of MAVART, to provide a set of problems to validate proper operation of MAVART after modifications are made, and to help in establishing timing benchmarks. For each example, the manual shows significant results of the MAVART analysis in the form of graphic plots such as model grids, stress and strain contours, pressure and pressure gradient contours, displacements, and plots of various parameters versus frequency. Objects studied in the examples include piezoelectric spherical shells, piezoelectric rings, trilaminar bender disks, shell thin disks/tubes, analytical and compliant fluids, a shell tube with ring stiffening, and a ring array with rigid nodes.

Presents a study of about 74,000 square kilometres of mixedwood boreal forest in northern Alberta, with the main objective of acquiring, synthesising, and applying information on the response of the forest to broad-scale timber harvesting. Study methodology involved analysis of landscape patterns and species-specific population attributes in the area, followed by development of a model of landscape dynamics including components of vegetation zonation, successional change, and disturbance regimes (notably fire). The model includes a new, non-spatial fires history model developed from provincial fire history data. Simulation of the effects of logging in the study area was performed by TARDIS, a specially developed spatial harvest schedule simulator. A sub-project of the study involved an experimental study of how forest fragmentation induced by timber harvesting affects the community and population dynamics on non-game birds in aspen-dominated forest. In the experiment, fragments of old mixedwood forest, from one to 100 hectares in size, were isolated from adjacent forest and bird populations documented before and after isolation. A correlation matrix revealed relationships between bird species densities and habitat variables. Concludes with a systematic comparison of three spatial forest inventory data sets which revealed discrepancies in estimated forest composition.

A permutation phase is a grammatical phase that specifies a syntactic construct as any permutation of a set of constituent elements. Permutation phrases allow for the concise and natural expression of free-order constructs as found in programming languages and notations such as C, COBOL, and UNIX command lines. This paper illustrates the conciseness and clarity of expression that permutation phrase grammars offer over context-free grammars through a case study of the declarations in C. The paper considers the parsing problem for permutation phrase grammars and shows how efficient linear-time parsing can be achieved for permutation phrase grammars satisfying an extended notion of the LL(1) property.

Halifax Harbour Cleanup Inc. (HHCI) is proposing to construct a sewage treatment facility for Metropolitan Halifax-Dartmouth in the vicinity of McNabs Island. The development includes placement of a collector sewer along the Halifax waterfront using both tunnelling and open trenching techniques. It is anticipated that the principal impacts of the project on historic and archaeological resources will be associated with the excavation of open trenches and construction and interconnection shafts along the route of the sewer line. The study undertaken focused on areas within Halifax that will be directly impacted by the excavation of open trenches and construction and interconnection shafts. A secondary area of focus is the general archaeological potential of Herring Cove, in anticipation of any construction activities that might be carried out in that area. The study aims to identify within the zones of impact and determine the nature and significance of those resources.

Archiving of tissues or environmental samples provides a source of material for retrospective analysis of toxic persistent compounds such as heavy metals or organic contaminants. The biggest challenge facing these types of analyses is maintaining the integrity of samples contained within a tissue archive or specimen bank. This report presents results of a study conducted to determine the changes in concentrations of total polychlorinated biphenyl, organochlorine residues, lipid, and moisture content in homogenised whole-fish lake trout samples during long-term frozen storage at three storage temperatures (in domestic chest freezers at -20°C, in commercial ultra-low temperature freezers at -80°C, and in liquid nitrogen at -196°C). The report provides data from fresh samples and from samples exposed to six storage periods over four years of frozen storage. Additional samples of stored extracts originally analysed at three and four years of storage and replicate samples of tissue originally placed in storage at the beginning of this study were reanalysed.

MICROLOG 96-03967 (1 fiche)

The New Brunswick Dept of Natural Resources uses a density-based productivity model for determining reimbursement rates for precommercial thinning (PCT) on Crown land. In response to concerns that the model makes no provision for non-density related stand conditions and the possibility that the model may be unfair to private woodlot operators or to those working in atypical stands, a study was initiated to identify what factors (in addition to stand density) affect PCT productivity, and to develop a productivity model or models based on these factors. Study methods included observations made of operators performing PCT with spacing saws, with a particular effort to focus on high- and low-density areas and to observe a wide range of stand conditions in order to capture factors other than density that may affect PCT productivity. Field data collection included a pre-thin stand assessment, a fine study of operator activities (average observation time about 3.6 hours), and a post-thin assessment. Regression analyses were used to identify stand factors having a significant effect on PCT productivity and to develop suitable models. Ancillary stand factors examined included species composition, tree size, and tree spatial distribution.

Forillon National Park, established in 1970, covers about 250 square kilometres on the north-eastern extremity of the Gaspé peninsula. This document presents a revised management plan for the park, based on the same approach used for the 1978 plan and its 1988 revision. It begins with an outline of the role of the park and Parks Canada's objectives for the park in terms of such factors as resource preservation and heritage tourism. It then presents a vision for the park in the 21st century and describes the park's regional context, natural and cultural environment, park development work completed, and visitor attendance and use. Park management issues are then discussed and guidelines for park development are presented with regard to resource preservation, park territory and use, cultural resources, interpretation and awareness programs, visitor attendance and marketing, visitor service, access, park activities, regional integration, third-party co-operation, safety, and fees. Finally, the document describes the park zoning plan and reviews an environmental assessment to be undertaken to evaluate potential impacts stemming from plan guidelines.

The Yukon/Alaska Fortymile caribou herd, named during the Klondike gold rush after the Fortymile River in the Yukon, has fluctuated in size from several hundred thousand to near extinction. This publication reviews the history of the herd, from the late 19th century gold rush era when it was a major source of food for the miners, to the first recovery of the herd (1900-20), through the big decline of 1920-40, to the second recovery and third decline (1940s to early 1970s). Reasons for the declines and recoveries are discussed, including hunting, natural predation, and game hunting restrictions. The role of hunters and access to highways in these fluctuations is stressed. The publication ends with an overview of current efforts to assist expansion of the herd and a short discussion of the implications of a successful return of the herd for the tourist industry and for Yukon residents.

The Nova Scotia Minister of Justice appointed a committee to conduct a comprehensive review of the province's 1994 Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, which granted right of access to a variety of provincial government records and established a review process to mediate complaints from those denied access to records. The committee mandate was to consider whether the Act should be extended to municipal governments, school boards, universities, colleges, hospitals, self-governing professional societies and scores of provincial agencies, boards, and commissions; and to recommend measures to improve existing provisions of the act. This report summarises the committee's review, which included discussions with interested parties and receipt of submissions from organisations and individuals. Committee findings and recommendations are presented under sections covering the extension of the definition of a public body, the role and responsibilities of the review officer, offences under the Act, administration of the Act, privacy provisions of the Act, and periodic reviews of the Act. The appendices include a list of Nova Scotia agencies, boards, and commissions; a summary of recommendations; and the text of the Act and its regulations.

Computer-mediated learning experiences have joined television and video in the classroom, giving rise to new expectations on the part of teachers and learners, and requiring new types of educational products from television programmers. This report describes how education is evolving toward more learner-centred, constructivist approaches to learning. It explains how developments in communication media and instructional design can support this move away from passive viewing to interactive learning, and describes four ways in which TVOntario may adapt existing resources to meet the new educational needs: repackaging to such media as videodisc or CD-ROM; interactiving, or taking an existing linear video program and transferring it to another medium to make it interactive; redesigning, involving production of new lessons by mixing materials from other sources with new materials; and resourcing, in which TVOntario would provide an information resource for teachers and students to access as they construct lessons, presentations, or multimedia essays.

This report of the Task Force on Access to Capital of the Canadian Labour market and Productivity Centre discusses and makes recommendations concerning financing barriers relevant to small and medium-sized enterprises in Canada. A central message of the Task Force is that equity capital should be given heightened emphasis in Canadian investment and financing, especially for small and medium-sized enterprises.

This report examines data from three independent series of black spruce test material, established at 15 field locations and ranging from 10 to 15 years from planting, two retrospective outdoor nursery tests up to six years of age, and four retrospective greenhouse tests ranging from one to four growing cycles. This material included two sets of open-pollinated families and a set of 40 full-sib families that had been clonally replicated and established. The tests yielded information regarding the genetic parameters and correlation between traits assessed at various ages, information which is required to evaluate the merits of alternate breeding strategies for future generations of trees. The test series present conflicting demonstrations of the impact of early selection. Analyses of genotype-environment data indicate the degree of inclusion of a nonadditive genetic variance component in the genetic structure of black spruce.

GISForman+ (Geographic Information System linked FORest MANagement plus) is a hybrid forest simulator, drawing from both spatial and aspatial forest modelling experience. Its spatial nature originates from GISFORMAN and uses the ArcInfo GIS, while much of its management control functionality is modelled from FORMAN+1, both simulators based on the FORMAN software. GISForman+ allows forest planners to forecast forest response to spatial management strategies. It applies rule-based harvest and silviculture intervention strategies to a forest model of stand conditions and locations, growth patterns, and intervention (treatment) alternatives. Using a spatial forest model, GISForman+ can model harvest size opening limits and the resulting harvesting restrictions. This user manual describes the concepts behind GISForman+, explores the software's forest model as well as its management strategy and simulator functionality, describes the items held in the various files required by GISForman+ in a functional way (more technical descriptions of file formats are in the appendix), reviews the simulation reporting outputs, and outlines the simulation creation tutorial.

Conventional measures and standards associated with the planning, monitoring, and evaluation of research and development projects have tended to be dominated by Euro-American scientific perceptions of environmental and developmental change using top-down approaches to data collection and analysis. This book draws attention to an alternate approach involving grassroots indicators, which are measures or signals of environmental quality or change formulated by individuals, households, and communities, and derived from their local systems of observation, practice, and indigenous knowledge. The book is a compilation of papers on grassroots indicators in the context of desertification control, as illustrated by African experience. The first part of the book reviews the historical and contextual background of development and desertification indicators. The second part considers the changes in the methodologies and thinking needed to identify grassroots indicators better and to help local people determine the sustainability of their natural resource management. The third part examines the overall implications and impact of grassroots indicators on sustainable resource management. The papers include examples of experience with grassroots indicators in Kenya, Uganda, Tanzania, and Zimbabwe.

Growth and yield models in silviculture design : linking models across scale

Traditional forest growth and yield models are developed for a particular spatial and temporal scale, but most silviculture problems span one or more such scales, making it unlikely that a single model will ever meet all silviculture design needs. For silviculturists to begin utilising decision support systems to design plans for non-timber resources, linkages between resource models must be developed. This paper utilises two case studies to demonstrate how linkages between resource models can be developed to aid silviculture design. The first study examines treatment response curves; linkages between an individual tree growth and yield simulator (FIBER 3.0) and a strata-based yield curve are developed for tolerant hardwood stands via relative density change equations. The second focuses on trade-offs between timber production and stand-level wildlife habitat quality. Output from an individual tree growth and yield simulator, the Northeast variant of Forest Vegetation System (Prognosis) is linked with a grouse habitat suitability index developed by Hammill and Moran (1986).

Since 1977, the Dept. of Fisheries & Oceans has maintained a specimen bank at the Great Lakes Laboratory for Fisheries & Aquatic Sciences. The specimen bank, a complementary project to the Department's ongoing Great Lakes Contaminants Surveillance Program, maintains homogenised whole-fish samples for future retrospective analysis of contaminants. The bulk of this program's activities has focused on defining the effects of long-term frozen storage conditions on the integrity of the pesticide or organochlorine residues in archived biological tissues. In 1983, with the acquisition of ultralow-temperature freezers, the scope of the specimen bank was enlarged to include a limited selection of invertebrates representing the lower trophic levels of the Great Lakes food chains. In 1988, this archive was expanded outside the Great Lakes basin to include samples of both freshwater and marine species collected under the Department's portion of the Canadian National Dioxin Program and samples collected from a co-operative Arctic environmental monitoring program. This report describes the sampling, field collection, sample preparation, sample storage, and database management methods used for the specimen bank. The appendix includes a list of species represented in the specimen bank; and summaries of numbers of samples by species, year collected, and collection location.

Habitat suitability index (HSI) models developed in the United States for a variety of species, including trout, have been suggested for use in southern Ontario as possible tools for evaluating the impacts of human activity on the productive capacity of fish habitat. This report describes a study that tested the applicability of a rainbow trout model, a brook trout model, and a brown trout model to Ontario conditions. Using trout biomass as a measure of productive capacity, the investigators collected biomass and habitat data from 118 sites across southern Ontario and evaluated the ability of the models to predict biomass. They also developed new and modified HSI-type models and tested them using data collected in 1992 and 1993, comparing their performance to that of the other models. Deviations from expected biomass at individual sites are explained. The appendix includes a methodology for habitat data collection.

Heat generation and heating limits for the IRUS LLRW disposal facility

By R.E. Donders, F. Caron and J. Slaby. Chalk River, ON : Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd., Chalk River Laboratories, 1995. 18 p. : Bibl. (AECL research / Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. ; AECL-11373 ISSN 0067-0367) Paper presented at the 1995 Waste Management Conference. ISBN 0-660-16272-5 CCG-P no. CC2-11373E MICROLOG 96-03483 (1 fiche)

The proposed Intrusion Resistant Underground Structure (IRUS) is based on an open-bottom concrete vault and is designed for near-surface disposal of low-level radioactive waste (LLRW) with a hazardous lifetime of under 500 years. Heat generation from radioactive decay and chemical degradation must be considered when disposing of LLRW in the IRUS. This paper presents heat transfer calculations performed using a finite element code with realistic but somewhat conservative heat transfer parameters and environmental boundary conditions. The paper also discusses the factors that limit the heating rate in the IRUS facility, presents the calculated heat rate limits for IRUS that give a maximum temperature of 38 degrees C, and presents results of calculations for heating within IRUS for radioactive heating caused by specific isotope sources and for heat generated from biogeochemical processes associated with waste decomposition.

In this policy paper, the federal government lays out a number of steps to improve the management of its science and technology investment. This summary document presents highlights of new S&T directions under way in the federal public service. The following S&T directions are in response to the new federal management framework, which sets out seven operating principles that strongly reflect the advice received through the S&T review process.

Founded in 1977, the Société's task is to diminish the risks inherent in the use of the roadway. It carries out that mission by acting in 4 areas: monitoring access to the highway, monitoring highway carriers, highway safety promotion and road accident victims' compensation. This report describes the Société, the board of directors, the management committee and gives an organization chart. It then describes the management of highway carrier monitoring, achievements, and influence on the transport industry.

Titanium is one of the container material options in the Canadian Nuclear Fuel Waste Management Program. The material has very good corrosion resistance under the anticipated disposal conditions under ground. This paper investigates one of the likely corrosion failure mechanisms affecting the container material: hydrogen assisted cracking (HIC). The investigators used a slow strain rate technique to accelerate the cracking process in Grade-2 titanium in order to establish the relative conditions where delayed HIC might be possible. The results presented include the dependence of the type of crack growth (fast or slow) on hydrogen concentrations, the relationship between the titanium material strength and the critical hydrogen concentration above which fast crack growth occurs, and the effects of microstructure on the cracking behaviour of Grade-2 titanium.

Impact of Armillaria root rot in intensively managed white spruce/aspen stands

The Western Boreal Growth and Yield (WESBOGY) experiment was initiated to determine the growth and yield of aspen and white spruce when the two species occur in mixtures at different densities. Armillaria root rot may play an important role in mixedwood management because the fungus can attack both spruce and aspen, and the spatial distribution of trees influences the spread of these pathogens. The ultimate objective of WESBOGY is to determine the effect of the different densities on the impact of Armillaria root rot. However, as Armillaria may be distributed irregularly across the landscape, it is necessary to know the initial pathogen population so that it can be used as a covariate to adjust estimated treatment effects to account for different starting levels of Armillaria. This paper reports on a project to determine the distribution of Armillaria in two replicates of the WESBOGY trial. Armillaria distribution was determined by inserting trap logs into the soil between the planted spruces in July 1993 and examining the logs a year later for the distinctive white mycelium typical of Armillaria.

Through the 1970s and mid-1980s, impaired driving increased significantly in Prince Edward Island, reaching a high of 1,570 convictions in 1979-80. Legislative changes and increased penalties coupled with a public awareness campaign led to a significant decline in impaired driving charges in the province in 1986, and the trend to fewer charges has continued. As a part of the province's continued focus on impaired driving prevention, this document proposes a five-year strategic plan including preventive, public awareness, detection, early intervention, treatment, and rehabilitation activities to address the impaired driver problem. The document includes background information on impaired driving offences in the province, with comparisons to the rest of Canada; a summary of a survey on public attitudes to impaired driving and its prevention; examples of impaired driving prevention activities in other provinces; an outline of possible interventions aimed at impaired driving; and a discussion of barriers to changing impaired driving behaviour.

Reviews the measures taken since 1988 by the Government of Canada, more specifically by 58 selected federal departments, agencies, and Crown corporations, to give effect to Part VII (Sections 41-45) of the Official Languages Act, 1988. Part VII commits the government to enhance the vitality of English and French linguistic minority communities, supporting and assisting their development, and fostering the full recognition and use of both English and French in Canadian society. Data for the review were gathered by interviews with senior personnel of the selected institutions, documentary analysis, and a telephone survey among a random sample of federal executives. The documentary analysis focused on mission statements, corporate plans, budgets, annual reports, and departmental official languages policies, as well as executives' responses to a request indicating what would be an appropriate implementation scheme for meeting Part VII commitments. Observations and recommendations resulting from the review are presented in sections covering leadership (including training of public employees and development of management and information systems) and sectors of program impact (cultural development, economic and human resources development, federal procurement, demographic vitality, other activities). Appendices include the text of Part VII and guidelines for implementation.

Recent demographic and socio-economic trends are profoundly reshaping the market for urban transit in Canada. This report documents the case studies conducted as part of a study to document critical demographic and socio-economic trends, assess the strategic implications of these trends for the Canadian urban transit industry, and develop feasible strategies which respond to the identified trends. The case studies explored the implications of those trends in five different types of communities: large metropolitan centres (Montreal, Toronto), metropolitan suburbs (Montreal South Shore, Laval, Mississauga), major independent regional cities (Quebec, Winnipeg), smaller regional cities (London), and other small centres (St Catharines). Each case study discusses the community profile, transit operator characteristics, travel and transit market characteristics, and ridership and market share forecasts for 2001 and 2006. The studies provide a common market stratification on which to base the comparison of travel and transit market characteristics for the different communities.

Using the discussions held during a major workshop, the study identifies four potential strategies and a considerable variety of tactics that transit systems might use to respond to these trends. The report then discusses implications by type of community and finally recommends guiding principles for action. The appendix discusses data requirements for local analysis.

Incremental cost of trucking grain from delivery points on branch lines whose operation is to be abandoned to alternate delivery points : report

By Andrew W. Gemmill. Ottawa : National Transportation Agency, Branch Line Advisory Committee, 1995. 33 p.

MICROLOG 96-03853 (1 fiche)

In April 1995, the National Transportation Agency conducted an analysis of the economic costs to the grain handling and transportation system of retaining or abandoning a number of light steel and low-volume Prairie grain branch lines. This report describes the approach used to develop the incremental costs of trucking grain implied by a change from the current situation to the abandonment of the branch lines under study, giving rise to an alternate scenario. The study team used a three-step approach to estimate the incremental costs of trucking grain: estimation of grain hauling costs to the current delivery point locations from producers' farms; estimation of anticipated costs for hauling the same volume of grains to alternate delivery point locations; and subtracting current haul costs from alternate haul costs. The report includes a review of the sources of basic information needed to carry out those three steps, including information on grain volumes and traffic, delivery points and distances, the truck costing model, and sensitivities to changes in assumptions. The appendix includes trucking cost results using the Trimac costing model.

In New Brunswick, efforts to control populations of spruce budmoth by spraying adults with insecticides or pheromones have produced encouraging results. An alternative technique, the selection of less-susceptible spruce, would aid in the development of an integrated management program for this insect pest. Differences in spruce damage as revealed in previous studies could be due to oviposition choice and/or to host suitability. However, researchers must determine the distribution of eggs laid by the spruce budmoth before they can determine whether some families of spruce have low levels of damage because they are avoided by ovipositing females and/or because they are less suitable for egg and larval development. This report presents results from studies carried out to quantify the number of eggs laid on trees from different families. Investigators collected tree branch samples from plantations and a seed orchard in May, before bud burst or egg hatching commenced. They analysed variations in oviposition parameters (such as number of eggs and egg masses, number of eggs parasitized by Trichogramma minutum, and number of viable eggs) using analysis of variance. To determine whether differences in egg density were related to plant morphology, they also measured such parameters as shoot length and diameter, needle length, shot type, and needle density.

The ability of public transit to take advantage of public concerns over environmental protection is hampered by the public perception that transit buses are serious pollution offenders. It is critical to overcome this image problem in order to persuade riders to shift to public transit for environmental reasons. To address this problem, the Canadian Urban Transit Association has conducted a study to guide transit organisations toward potential improvements. The results of this study are laid out in two parts: principles of environmental management and an environmental management handbook. The first part provides a general framework for developing an environmental management system and discusses fundamental principles and issues such as environmental policy development, management accountability, audit and verification, and consideration of needs of external public interests. The second part provides a practical perspective on actions that transit systems can take to implement environmental initiatives. The handbook includes an environmental program checklist for use as a starting point, a comprehensive list of potential environmental initiatives, and a detailed guide for organising an internal environmental audit.

Girdling is sometimes used as a silvicultural technique to remove unwanted trees, with the goal of having the tree die and gradually break up and fall down piece by piece. Many wildlife species require dead standing or fallen trees as habitat, and there is concern that there may be a shortage of these trees in intensively managed stands. This study examined 309 girdled trees in Nova Scotia to determine their condition and value as wildlife habitat. Results presented in this technical note include percentage of trees killed by girdling technique and by species, characteristics of girdled trees having natural or excavated cavities and having woodpecker feed holes, and the types of trees having cavities. The wildlife management implications of the results are discussed.

The Canadian Urban Transit Association has organised a process involving technical workshops and discussions, resulting in the identification and prioritisation of the research and development needs of the Canadian transit industry. This document describes the process followed to identify the issues facing the industry in 1994, and identifies a variety of research needs that would assist the industry in responding to those issues. The issues are organised in four categories: policies and partnership strategies affecting mode choice, ridership development strategies, design and implementation of vehicles and technologies, and transit system efficiency.

Cette revue des essais théoriques et des recherches sur les jeunes homosexuels masculins constitue une première étape dans le cheminement de recherche d'une stratégie d'intervention appropriée à la prévention de l'infection à VIH dans ce groupe spécifique. Les objectifs de la démarche sont de dégager les perspectives théoriques dominantes des écrits sur l'homosexualité, d'en approfondir les concepts-clé, et de documenter les phénomènes psycho-sociaux sur lesquels essayistes et chercheurs se sont penchés dans leurs travaux sur les jeunes homosexuels. Les modèles théoriques d'intervention pour le bien-être de ces jeunes et pour la prévention de l'infection à VIH, ainsi que les recherches évaluatives, font l'objet d'une attention particulière. Cette recension permet d'éclairer des avenues d'interventions et de recherches futures auprès de cette population pour que ses conditions d'existence s'améliorent, et par là que soit, peut-être, réduite l'incidence des infections à VIH dans ce groupe.

Describes a study set up in juvenile mixed 9-to-14-year-old stands established on clearcuts within two of Alberta's natural regions in order to provide quantification of deciduous (aspen and balsam poplar) competition and white spruce growth. Relationships of deciduous competition and white spruce height, basal diameter, and current diameter and height increments were tested by regression methods. About 40 competition and microsite variables were selected or developed for analysis, categorised in the following groups: ten based on stem density, 13 based on crown cover, nine based on distance, and 13 based on microsite conditions. The analyses examined not only deciduous competition and white spruce growth interaction, but also the simultaneous effects of several competition variables. The results substantiate the need for adaptive management of juvenile mixed stands adjustable to stand and ecological conditions and resource management objectives.

A regenerating stand growth model being developed by the Edmundston Applied Forestry Technology Group operates by individual tree leaf areas which are used in tree growth and inter-tree light competition calculations. Stand leaf area index (LAI) is one of the main stand characteristics and is considered as an important reference variable for model calibration. This study addresses the lack of field data describing young individual tree leaf areas as well as LAI in New Brunswick. The investigators determined these variables for 24 6.67-square-metre plots selected in 5, 10, and 15 year old stands located in north-western New Brunswick. The study includes a description of field sampling and laboratory methods used, as well as the results of determinations of biomass and LAI for the plots examined. The appendix includes a complete listing of all tree, shrub, and herb species found on the stands sampled.

Recall is a formal citizen-driven process where an elected representative can be removed from office during the normal life of a legislature. This paper describes the concept of the recall and its history, relates the recall concept to democratic theory and the Canadian constitution, and notes the use of recall in other jurisdictions. Special attention is paid to the workability of recall with respect to two features unique to parliamentary systems: the representative basis of cabinet ministers and the concept of party discipline (or in the Northwest Territories, cabinet discipline). The paper then considers various issues related to the practice of recall: periods of immunity or protection, the petitioning process, filing fees, the rationale for initiating a recall, number of signatures required on the petition, time limits, circulation of the petition, validation and verification of signatures, consequences of a successful petition, recall campaign spending and financing, enforcement and penalties, and administrative costs. Finally, the paper explores the advantages and drawbacks to implementing recall in the Northwest Territories.

This study was initiated to investigate factors that should be considered in the evaluation of clonal propagation as a breeding tool and deployment method for reforestation. The study methodology included interviews with personnel from government and industry and a literature review. It begins with an overview of conventional and non-conventional approaches to tree breeding, and a review of general decision factors for deciding on new approaches to breeding and reforestation (technical and logical feasibility, biodiversity, risk of failure, and costs/benefits). It then evaluates genetic gains by simulating the results over time of seedling and clonal strategies. The simulator estimated gains under a variety of genetic variance scenarios for eight breeding strategies, using a consistent 28-year breeding cycle in all cases. The study also developed a financial analysis procedure which extends standard discounted present value techniques to incorporate allowable-cut effects and changes in stumpage value resulting from genetic improvement. The simulations demonstrated the impact of clonal replication of genotypes on the efficiency of breeding programs, the utility of vegetative multiplication, and the requirements for viability of true clonal forestry.

In 1965, Prime Minister Lester B. Pearson spoke of the federal government's vision for what would become Medicare. The dilemma we now face demands a substantial national dialogue on the future of Medicare. With this in mind, provinces like New Brunswick are looking at every option to sustain the system. With dwindling federal contributions, a need to address the provincial debt, and the government's commitment to balancing the budget, we are forced to look at how we pay for health and community services. To ensure that quality services are available for everyone, we need to make the system more manageable and more efficient. This document precisely looks at the issue of making health and community services sustainable.

The hypotheses that Canada lacks a training culture and that management development is not an integral part of doing business in Canada, are examined.

The plan document begins with the context for the plan, including an ecosystems approach to guide forest management. The plan then examines forest management alternatives and their associated long-term impacts, the province's forest economy and strategies for expanding it, and the historical experience and existing regime of policies, programs, and practices, along with their impacts. The plan concludes with a test of the key aspects of the planning framework: a case study conducted for Ecoregion 91 in south-eastern Manitoba. Includes glossary.

Describes the application of a geographic information systems (GIS) methodology to identify potential areas for ecotourism in the Wawa-Sault Ste Marie-North Bay-Kirkland Lake area. Emphasis is placed on the application of the technology to determine its suitability for this type of task. SPANS GIS was used to produce a series of maps for the 80,000-square-kilometre study area, each map essentially a layer of data that could be overlaid on each other in any specified or random order. Each map was scored according to its ecotourism potential and cumulative scores for each map area were represented in total form on the final map. The output of this project was a series of maps depicting ecotourism units. This note discusses the results of these thematic GIS map layers, representing vegetation coverage, resource-related activity (mining and forestry), access characteristics, presence of community, wildlife potential and landscape (water and relief). The overall result identified four ecotourism units as having the greatest potential for ecotourism development.

C2-291/2-1996E MICROLOG 96-03671 (6 fiche)

A collection of research reports on new media learning materials (NMLM) begins with an overview of the Canadian Occupational Projection System (COPS) model which was used to make projections of expected employment demand by industry and occupation for Canada for the period 1995-2005. Results of these projections are presented and discussed, and those sectors recommended for further analysis of market potential for NMLM are noted. The next report assesses the domestic market potential of NMLM in sectors such as various service industries, banking, logistics, education, construction, agriculture, printing, biotechnology, and engineering. The third report makes a case for NMLM (or multimedia) use in business, noting the benefits of NMLM used for training purposes, the instances where NMLM-based training is appropriate, and costs of NMLM development and delivery. The fourth report analyses the economic benefits of NMLMs with respect to reduced training costs, increased productivity, and employment impacts. Cost savings and employment impacts are also analysed on a sectoral basis. The fifth report examines the market potential for NMLMs in the United States, Pacific Rim, and Europe. The collection ends with results of a survey of NMLM suppliers in Canada.

This study quantifies the compliance costs associated with the federal SR&ED incentives through a survey of companies active in research and development. And, since a large portion of total federal R&D spending is delivered through grants, the compliance costs of grants are also investigated. Consequently, this study makes a contribution to the literature on the choice between grants and tax incentives for business. The study presents the profile of companies surveyed and the survey results.

Cette étude a pour objet de chiffrer les coûts d'observation liés aux encouragements fiscaux accordés par le gouvernement fédéral pour la R&DE à partir d'une enquête effectuée auprès d'entreprises actives dans le domaine de la R&D. Comme les subventions représentent une proportion importante des dépenses fédérales totales en R&D, nous avons aussi examiné les coûts d'observation liés aux subventions. Par conséquent, cette étude fait un apport aux travaux qui traitent du choix entre l'offre de subventions aux entreprises et l'accès par celles-ci à des stimulants fiscaux. L'étude présente le profil des entreprises comprises dans l'enquête et les résultats de l'enquête.

This report responds to concerns expressed to the Manitoba Law Reform Commission by the Consent Committee of the Winnipeg Health Sciences Centre regarding the issue of consent of minors to medical treatment. In particular, the Committee asked the Commission about the advisability of legislation to clarify the law in respect of the power of persons under age 18 to consent to health care. The report reviews the current Manitoba law relating to consent, noting the relevance of the mature minor rule as expressed in common law. It also reviews some legislative provisions directly relevant to particular kinds of medical treatment and indirectly relevant to the health care of young persons. The report then assesses the adequacy of the current law and reviews legislative reforms related to consent of minors in other provinces and countries. The report concludes with proposals for reform that take into account the need to balance the interests of minors, health care providers, and the public.

The objective of this study is to examine the Canadian urban transportation market in order to determine what improvements to public transit service, land use patterns, and other factors, together with the support of governments, business, and individuals, would be most likely to improve the modal share of transit. This report details the information collection and analysis process carried out for this study, and the methodology used for the construction of integrated strategies to meet the goal of improving transit's modal share. It begins with an introduction on the role of transit and the socio-demographic and technological trends affecting transit. It then discusses the development of a list of strategic options, identifies specific transit sub-markets through a transit market segmentation, compiles customized strategies for key sub-markets, and discusses the challenges of implementing the strategies. The appendices include: a set of fact sheets describing specific strategic options, each including a description of the option, a summary of its observed or expected effect on ridership and mode choice, the option's relevance to market and city size, other effects of the option, costs, and implementation requirements; a report on taxation measures and modal shift; and results of a survey of attitudes toward transit as an alternative to automobile usage.

A Model, one publicly funded school system : discussion paper

Toronto : Ontario Public School Boards' Assn., 1996. 11 p. ONTERIS ON07934
MICROLOG 96-03436 (1 fiche)

This paper proposes a model for community government of education in Ontario, a model for one publicly funded system which at once accommodates the public interest, achieves substantial savings and greater efficiency, and respects denominational and linguistic rights. The proposal recommends that the provincial Education Act be amended to permit consenting public, separate, and French-language school boards to form one community education authority with sectors for public, Roman Catholic, and French-language education, for which trustees would be elected to represent each respective constituency. The paper outlines the basic division of authority and powers relevant to the proposed model and discusses the constitutional framework of the model.

Describes a multiple scattering propagation model of narrow light beams in aerosol media, based on a paraxial approximation of the radiative transfer equation in which the flux normal to the incident beam direction is modelled by a diffusion process. The model solutions are the forward- and backscattered intensity profiles for the specified geometry and receiver aperture and field of view. The required inputs are the system parameters, and the aerosol single scattering angular phase function and extinction and scattering coefficients which are allowed to vary along the beam axis. Includes comparison of model results to those obtained in laboratory experiments performed over scales ranging from a few tens of millimetres to a few metres, and in experiments in the atmosphere at a scale on the order of one kilometre.

The objectives of this study were to evaluate the advantages and drawbacks of a regional municipality structure for Cumberland County, the second largest county in Nova Scotia; and in case that the advantages did not outweigh the disadvantages, to identify other structural options for enhancing local government regional service delivery. The study process included extensive public consultation, a focus group session on economic development, and interviews with representatives of specific interests and organisations. The study team also undertook a financial analysis to develop an understanding of the current financial position of the five municipal units in the county. An inventory of service levels and methods of service delivery in the county, along with the identification of opportunities for improvement, indicated whether amalgamation of the municipal units would result in significant financial savings or improved service delivery. The study concludes with a list of guiding principles based on the output from the public consultation process, the financial analysis, and the deliberations of the study team. A recommended program of municipal government change is also put forward for consideration by the five municipal councils and the provincial Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Aspects of the new policy reviewed in the document include the proposed National Marine Act, which is intended to consolidate and modernise the marine regulatory regime; a reorganised ports system including a federally managed National Ports System and regional/local ports transferred to local organisations; commercialisation of the St Lawrence Seaway; support for ferry services; and maintenance of an effective pilotage regime. Appendices include lists of ports.

The present investigation consisted of three studies designed to investigate lifestyle characteristics, life events and psychological adjustment in older individuals and to examine how these factors are related to the sleep experience; explore the natural course of sleep complaints in a population 'at risk'; and develop an effective insomnia treatment and evaluate both its short term and long term effects. Subjects for the three studies were selected from a pool of 742 community dwelling older individuals (mean age = 68) who have participated in various aspects of our research on sleep and ageing. Measures administered yield information on demographic factors, a range of sleep parameters, and on subjective perceptions of sleep quality, cognitive style, affect and psychological adjustment.

In order to assess irradiation-induced corrosion effects, coolant radiolysis, and the degradation of the physical properties of reactor materials and components, it is necessary to determine the neutron, photon, and electron energy deposition profiles in the fuel channels of the reactor core. Several different computer codes may be used for this determination, but different codes have different assumptions and restrictions on the way they can model the core physics and geometry. This report presents results of a study of models of neutron and photon energy deposition using the ANISN and MCNP codes. The results indicate the validity of using the codes for modelling energy deposition in CANDU fuel channels, the modifications necessary to achieve consistent results between the computer codes, and the advantages of the MCNP code.

If the current level of precommercial thinning is maintained or increases in Ontario forests, an adequate supply of trained and skilled workers is essential, especially for reducing the cost of this silviculture treatment. This paper describes a training program conducted to develop qualified instructors who would later be used to train a local workforce in forest thinning techniques. A company specialised in training forest workers trained eight students, mainly in the use of brush saws in relatively young, dense stands of softwood and hardwood. Part of the training was also dedicated to the use of chain saws in larger, precommercial/commercial thinning operations. The students later trained 35 local workers in northern Ontario. The paper reviews results of the training project as well as problems encountered during precommercial thinning with brush saws.

This working paper provides a series of strategies for enhancing education in Ontario and the ability of school boards to manage changing needs, tying the Ontario Public School Boards' Association recommendations on improving educational system accountability to recommendations for structural changes in boards of education. The paper begins with a discussion of local participation in education through locally elected education boards. It then presents the strategies for change in the following categories: the role of school board leadership; promotion of the role of the school trustee; trustee representation; school trustee and staff roles; school board amalgamation and boundary changes; school board confederation; and facilitation of co-operative and regional service delivery.

Ce plan directeur révisé résulte d'une réflexion, amorcée en 1993 et complétée en 1994 par une consultation du public, qui a permis de revoir certaines orientations afin de pouvoir ajuster les modalités de gestion du parc aux nouvelles conditions qui prévalent et aux tendances qui se dessinent pour les années à venir. Les orientations proposées permettront en outre de prendre en compte certains impératifs, tels la génération de revenus et le partenariat, découlant de la baisse prévue des crédits parlementaires octroyés à Parcs Canada pour assurer la gestion et l'exploitation de son réseau de parcs.

On y examine l'assermentation à l'effet qu'il existe des lacunes inquiétantes au niveau des compétences des cadres au Canada. Après une brève description du contexte à l'intérieur duquel se pose ce défi à la compétitivité de l'économie, nous nous penchons sur la question du caractère adéquat des services disponibles. Nous faisons état de données qui donnent à penser que des lacunes existent et nous mettons en relief les problèmes spéciaux auxquels sont confrontées les petites et les moyennes entreprises. Nous examinons les hypothèses selon lesquelles le Canada ne possède pas une culture de la formation et que le perfectionnement des cadres ne fait partie intégrante du processus de conduite des affaires au Canada.

Au total, 22 scénarios ont été retenus. C'est à la présentation et à la discussion des principaux résultats qui se dégagent de ces scénarios qu'est consacré le troisième chapitre. Comme il y a une convergence remarquable dans les résultats des divers scénarios, et afin de maintenir ce rapport dans des limites raisonnables, la discussion qui accompagne la présentation de ces divers résultats est relativement succincte. Seules les tendances dominantes sont analysées. Une brève conclusion résume les principaux résultats obtenus et tente prudemment d'en dégager les implications "politiques" majeures.

Describes a study evaluating the merits of replacing six municipal units in Nova Scotia (New Glasgow, Pictou, Stellarton, Trenton, Westville, and the Municipality of Pictou County) with a single regional municipality. The study was designed to examine the current method of delivering local government services, identifying strengths and weaknesses of service delivery, reviewing the current financial status of the municipal units, and examining costs and benefits of regionalisation. The study process included meetings with municipal representatives, site visits, and public consultations. Chapters of the study examine the major functions of the six municipal units, each chapter providing municipal profiles, assumptions about municipal structure and operation under amalgamation, estimates of operating costs under amalgamation, estimates of costs of transition to amalgamation, and discussion of advantages and drawbacks of amalgamation. The major functions include governance, finance and administration, police services, fire service, emergency measures, public works, social services, recreation services, economic development, and transportation. Appendices include a summary of public input to the study as well as detailed financial data.

By Susan Simosko. Victoria : Centre for Curriculum & Professional Development ; British Columbia Council on Admissions & Transfer, 1995. 39 p.
MICROLOG 96-03449 (1 fiche)

This paper presents a vision of what the education and training system in British Columbia would need to look like in order to fully embrace the concept of prior learning assessment (PLA). The paper considers PLA as a tool offering a range of flexible assessment options and strategies to promote the learning and development of individuals regardless of their background, program area, or academic or vocational aspirations. Each section of the paper is introduced by a scenario that takes place sometime in the future in which institutions have become truly learner-centred and actively promote the learning and development of everyone from students to staff to faculty to managers. The first section introduces the PLA concept and reviews its status in British Columbia. The second examines the critical issues in creating system-wide change and reviews the sort of change that will be required in the move to a system based on flexible assessment and outcomes. The final section suggests a series of action points that, along with other initiatives, will begin to create the vision of a new learning system in the province.

Potential effluent reuse for irrigation and constructed wetlands in the Prairie provinces

Prepared for: PFRA, Water Resources Section ; by: R.S. Pentland. Regina : Water Resource Consultants Ltd., 1993. vii, 121 p. : ill., Bibl.
MICROLOG 96-03756 (2 fiche)

In the Prairie Provinces, about a million cubic metres of treated sewage effluent is discharged daily. Residual pollutants in the effluent, mainly plant nutrients, add to the already high background concentrations in receiving waters. The same nutrients are useful agricultural inputs, as is the water which makes up over 99% of the effluent. The use of wastewater for irrigation in areas where availability of water is a factor limiting agricultural development could be of significant benefit to the generator of the effluent, the farmer, and the downstream water user. This report describes the technical considerations with respect to the use of treated effluent for irrigation or for feeding to constructed wetlands. It reviews the current state of effluent reuse in the Prairies, where experimental and operational effluent irrigation projects have functioned for about 20 years. Federal and provincial regulations, guidelines, and attitudes regarding effluent irrigation are also summarised. The report ends with an evaluation of the potential for effluent reuse in irrigation and wetlands in the Prairie Provinces and a discussion of the partnerships (federal, provincial, municipal, industrial) needed to achieve that potential. The appendix includes Canadian water quality guidelines for agricultural uses, and statistics on Prairie population and irrigated areas.

Les résultats de cette étude sont organisés en deux parties : principes de gestion environnementale, et guide pratique de gestion environnementale. La première partie décrit la problématique et les paramètres pour développer un système de gestion environnementale. Cette partie discute en particulier des aspects organisationnels pour s'assurer que les systèmes de gestion sont adéquats pour contrôler les impacts. La deuxième partie, le guide pratique de gestion environnementale, identifie les actions pratiques qui peuvent être entreprises en tant qu'initiatives environnementales. Le guide comprend un questionnaire d'évaluation environnementale qui peut servir de point de départ, une liste complète d'initiatives environnementales potentielles, et un guide pour l'organisation d'une vérification environnementale interne.

Information about Nova Scotia students is a key component of the information upon which decisions can be made and action taken to improve the quality and cost-effectiveness of education in the province. Detailed student information is currently available primarily at the schools, and is not necessarily consistent in definition and interpretation. At the provincial level, student information is only available in aggregated form. This report provides a preliminary analysis of a provincial information system called the Student Module which would contain data on all students enrolled in public school boards and community colleges. Kinds of data to be collected would include basic demographic and enrolment information, school finishing data, test and course results, and attendance and discipline information. The report makes recommendations for external design alternatives for the Student Module system, technical alternatives, database technology and software, software development and implementation, data definition, and system processes. It also includes a discussion of the benefits of the system and estimates of system costs. Cette publication décrit l'intégration au marché du travail des titulaires d'un baccalauréat ou d'une maîtrise qui ont obtenu leur diplôme au cours de l'année. Cet ouvrage comprend trois grandes parties. La première décrit la situation de l'ensemble des titulaires d'un baccalauréat ou d'une maîtrise, la 2e, celle des grands domaines de formation (19) et la 3e, celle des disciplines. Cette étude retrace l'évolution des principaux indicateurs du placement de la dernière décennie; elle permet de dégager des constatations fondamentales en ce qui concerne la nature des emplois occupés par les nouveaux titulaires de diplôme au début de leur carrière. Des nombreux indicateurs du placement qu'on trouve dans cette publication constituent une source de renseignements utiles pour les conseillères et les conseillers en orientation ou en information scolaire et professionnelle, de même que pour les spécialistes du marché du travail. On traite des professions, secteurs d'activité, durée du chômage, salaire, et satisfaction relative à l'emploi.

Après avoir reconnu le besoin d'obtenir des informations continues indiquant dans quelle mesure les diplômés en soins infirmiers réussissent à se trouver du travail, le ministère de l'Enseignement supérieur et du Travail, après avoir consulté les établissements d'enseignement et d'autres parties intéressées, s'est livré à un sondage des diplômés des sept établissements qui offrent un programme de sciences infirmières dans la province. Le sondage de 1995 visait tous les diplômés de 1994. Des questions ont été posées aux diplômés concernant leurs activités sur le marché du travail durant une semaine de référence. Le présent rapport a deux parties. La première présente l'ensemble des résultats de tous les programmes, soit aussi bien des écoles de soins infirmiers que des programmes universitaires. Les informations sont présentées d'après les indicateurs-clés, comme le taux d'emploi, l'emploi au Nouveau-Brunswick, les emplois ayant un rapport, le statut de l'emploi, les heures de travail, etc. La deuxième partie donne des informations sur la participation au marché du travail et sur l'emploi au niveau du programme. The estate of a person who dies without a will is distributed according to the Intestate Succession Act, patterned after British statutes dating back to 1670. The existing distribution scheme was designed to serve a society in which wealth was transferred from one generation to another, inheritance between spouses was exceptional, divorce was rare, and cohabitation outside marriage was considered sinful. As a result of societal changes, the current scheme no longer reflects how most intestates would want their estates to be distributed. This report examines the existing law of intestate succession and proposes a new distribution scheme designed to reflect the views of Albertans and to serve modern society. The report begins with a historical sketch and overview of Canadian intestacy legislation, societal trends, and what is known about intestates and their estates. Proposals for reform are presented in two parts and are guided by the perceived intentions of the intestates. The first part covers reforms relating to the spousal share, cohabitants, and same-sex couples; the second part considers the children of the intestate, inheritance by ancestors and collaterals, the doctrine of advancement, survivorship, and relatives of the half-blood. A draft of the reformed Act is included. The appendix contains a summary of a survey on adult living arrangements and a review of Alberta Surrogate Court files on estate distribution.

En 1965, le premier ministre Lester B. Pearson donnait la vision du gouvernement fédéral de ce que deviendrait un jour l'Assurance-maladie. Or, nous nous trouvons aujourd'hui devant un véritable dilemme. Les provinces, y compris le Nouveau-Brunswick, étudient tous les moyens en vue de maintenir le système de soins de santé. En raison de la diminution graduelle des contributions financières du gouvernement fédéral, du besoin de réduire la dette provinciale et de l'engagement du gouvernement à équilibrer son budget, nous sommes obligés de réviser soigneusement comment nous finançons les services de santé et les services communautaires. Afin de s'assurer que des services de qualité sont disponibles pour tous, nous devons rendre le système plus facile à gérer et plus efficace. Ce document se penche précisément sur cette question.

This report examines the influence of shelf circulation, in particular the effect of dispersion by wind and density driven currents, on the survival of cod larvae on the outer Scotian Shelf. The report describes the calculation methods and results of calculations of retention indices for the Scotian Shelf, based on the trajectories of water particles at 30 metres depth, for each March and April over the period 1956 to 1993. The retention index is defined as the proportion of particles retained in a box of given size, centred on a given location over a given period. The size of the box is chosen to approximate the size of the offshore spawning areas. The calculations used a three-dimensional circulation model driven by density gradients, wind stress, and flows through open boundaries. The circulation driven by horizontal density gradients is assumed steady and diagnosed from all available density data for the region. Forcing by wind stress is assumed spatially uniform and equal to that observed at Sable Island. The report also compares the annual variation in retention indices for known spawning sites of Scotian Shelf cod with their year-class success.

The foundation of the Strategy is the identification of core natural areas and linkages. Core natural areas are those which contribute significantly to maintaining biodiversity, productivity, and hydrological functions within the region. Linkages are generally linear features such as stream corridors which join core areas in a way which can allow for ecological connections, including wildlife movement. The report provides a brief summary of the steps taken to date to identify natural areas and linkages, documentation of the initial application of the preliminary criteria for identification, a summary of work completed on a framework to assess the relative significance of natural areas and linkages and related field methodology, and a description of the proposed steps to be taken in 1996.

This paper examines annual road impact costs resulting from abandonment of specific branch lines in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta, and from the consequent utilisation of the roads for transporting grain diverted from the branch lines. After an introduction on the methodological approach, the paper notes the grain tonnage's to be diverted and the extra distances to be travelled over the roads. The next sections examine road maintenance and reconstruction costs required to accommodate the grain traffic, and the traffic patterns and extra traffic created by additional grain tonnages. Findings are summarised in tabular form. An addendum addresses the Manitoba findings from two standpoints: the impact on the benefit-cost analyses of the specified branch lines, and the possible implications of these findings on other issues in the future.

Round Lake is the last lake of the Qu'Appelle River system in Saskatchewan. Perceived excessive growth of aquatic vegetation in the lake has prompted some resource users to remove submerged vegetation in some areas at potential risk of destroying fish habitat. A lake management plan is clearly needed to address such a problem, but fish habitat data needed for developing such a plan are lacking. This report describes a study conducted to obtain information on fish habitat in the nearshore areas of Round Lake, particularly to map and assess the extent of the growth and distribution of submerged and emergent macrophytes in that area of the lake. The investigators conducted field work during summer 1995, using a global positioning system to collect positional, quantitative, and qualitative data on aquatic vegetation and bottom substrates in the littoral zone. Foreshore and backshore areas were also surveyed for substrate, vegetation cover, slope, and development features. Results are presented in the form of maps and tables, with accompanying commentary.

Science and technology play a critical role in the health and well-being of Canadians and in the country's ability to generate sustainable employment and economic growth. This document presents a review that sets out the government's policy response. It reflects the views offered by Canadians during the nation-wide consultations. It responds to recommendations made in NABST's June 1995 report Healthy, Wealthy and Wise. It incorporates the major conclusions of the government's own internal review of its S&T activities. It also responds to the 1994 report of the Auditor General of Canada, which examined the overall management of federal S&T. And it follows through on the challenges posed by the measures taken in Program Review and announced in the budget process, to get government right and bring down Canada's burdensome debt and deficit.

On cover: Canada-Alberta Partnership Agreement in Forestry. ISBN 0-662-23625-4 CCG-P no. Fo42-91/131-1995E
MICROLOG 96-03995 (1 fiche)

Estimates the price responsiveness of timber supply for quota holders in Alberta, with quota holders divided into three categories based on their timber production capacities. Results indicate the influence of cost structures associated with seasonal conditions on timber supply decisions, and the responsiveness of timber supply to market prices for lumber. A dynamic optimisation technique was used to predict timber supply in the face of institutional constraints and to estimate shadow prices of those constraints. Expected values of lumber prices, wood chip prices, and interest rates were used in the econometric model, and the cost structure of large, medium, and small quota holders were calibrated so that the modelled behaviour mimics actual timber production. Results show the effect of institutional constraints on costs incurred by quota holders.

Cover title: Detailed design, implementation, test and installation of a space-based radar simulation laboratory : SimLab user's guide.

MICROLOG 96-03759 (5 fiche)

This manual describes the use of the Space-Based Radar Simulation Laboratory software package SimLab. SimLab provides a versatile environment in which a wide variety of dynamic systems can be simulated, in either a time-varying (discrete) or parameter-varying (functional) mode. The first few sections of the manual describe general system features, including the different types of runs that can be performed, the object-oriented structure in which simulation models are organised, the computing environment (hardware and software) required to install and run SimLab, fundamental operations such as logging on to the system and setting up projects, and basic features of the user interface that apply to all SimLab applications. The next sections describe the use of database forms for the definition of simulation models, and how the forms are used to define data sets that specify attributes for initialisation, recording, and monitoring of simulation runs; the use of graphic utilities; the definition and submittal of simulation runs for execution; functions to support post-run data analysis, including filtering and formatting of run logs and production of reports; development of model classes, including the actions needed to write, compile, and load user-defined models into the model libraries; and miscellaneous utility features of SimLab. The appendix contain error listings and corrective actions.

Small business financing in Manitoba : proposed changes to securities legislation

Winnipeg : Manitoba Securities Commission, 1995. 25 p.

MICROLOG 96-03545 (1 fiche)

In the context of various initiatives to promote small business financing, the Manitoba Securities Commission has developed this discussion paper to examine various recommendations made in Manitoba and elsewhere with a view to making specific proposals for amending provincial securities legislation. The paper begins with a review of the current statutory provisions of the Manitoba Act, the basic requirements relevant to any discussion toward easing the regulatory requirements for small issues (such as civil liability, limitations on marketing, financial information, registrant involvement, and continuous disclosure), and current exemptions from registration or prospectus requirements which are relevant to small business. The paper then summarises proposals for reform in Manitoba from the Manitoba Task Force on Capital Markets and the Winnipeg Stock Exchange, as well as proposals made in other jurisdictions including the United States, Ontario, and British Columbia. The paper concludes with specific proposals for change in Manitoba, which aim to expand exemptions and simplify registration or prospectus requirements for small and medium sized businesses.

Donald Sam...et al. Halifax : Dept. of Natural Resources, 1994. 4 p. (Technical note / Nova Scotia. Dept. of Natural Resources ; no. 74)
MICROLOG 96-03407 (1 fiche)

The peregrine falcon (Falco peregrinus, subspecies anatum) is one of four falcon species found in Nova Scotia. Between the late 1960s and early 1970s, the breeding population of peregrines in eastern North America declined precipitously, a decline attributed to widespread use of organochlorine pesticides. Restrictions or bans on pesticide use and initiation of a captive breeding program have helped restore the peregrine falcon over its former range. Since 1974, peregrines have been released at sites from Alberta to the Maritimes (since 1982 in Nova Scotia). This technical note reviews peregrine falcon recovery efforts in Nova Scotia, including falcon releases 1982-91, follow-up aerial and ground surveys, evidence for breeding in the province, implementation of a recovery plan, and observations of falcon interactions with shorebirds. Includes chronology of the falcon release program in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

An LPI radar enjoys an advantage over an intercept receiver due primarily to two features: the radar antenna gain and its processing gain. Several classical techniques are available to overcome the LPI radar's advantage in antenna gain, but techniques to overcome the processing gain advantage are not well established. Those techniques are the focus of this report, which begins with a brief review of classical intercept techniques based on probability of detection/probability of false alarm versus signal-to-noise ratio (SNR) criteria. These techniques are discussed in the context of ultra-short LPI pulses. The report then develops approaches for countering the processing gain advantage of frequency modulated type LPI pulses with low and even negative SNR. Those techniques are based on transforms taken over the pulse duration, focusing specifically on the wavelet transform and secondary detection techniques. The report also summarises techniques useful in the detection of the four generic types of LPI signals.

Systematicity and nomic necessity

By Robert F. Hadley. Burnaby, BC : Simon Fraser University, Centre for Systems Science, 1995. 30 p. : ill., Bibl. (Technical report / Simon Fraser University. Centre for Systems Science ; CSS-IS TR 95-08)

MICROLOG 96-03570 (1 fiche) (Available on fiche only)

In their 1988 paper, Fodor and Pylyshyn issued a challenge to provide a non-classical explanation of the empirical phenomenon of systematicity in cognitive agents. A number of connectionist systems have emerged since then which prima facie meet this challenge. A paper by Fodor and McLaughlin (1990), however, advanced the argument that one of these systems could not satisfy that challenge; in their view, humans and classical architectures display systematicity as a matter of necessity by virtue of natural law (nomic necessity) but connectionist architectures do not. The present paper argues that the Fodor-Pylyshyn-McLaughlin appeal to nomic necessity is untenable, and that the sense in which classical architectures do possess nomic necessity applies equally well to at least some connectionist architectures. In addition, the paper pursues a theme to the effect that Fodor and Pylyshyn are suspiciously binary in their thinking, and describes a working model which constitutes a synthesis of the connectionist and classical paradigms.

Ce rapport comprend deux parties. Dans la première, nous examinons de façon assez étroite les progrès de la théorie appréciative et ce que nous pouvons en tirer au sujet des rapports qui existent entre la technologie et la croissance économique. La deuxième partie du rapport regroupe une sélection de certaines des idées préconisées dans les travaux d'avant-garde sur la politique scientifique et technologique qui ont fait suite, parfois directement, au PTE. Plus précisément, les points qui y sont abordés sont les suivants : technologie et nouvelles théories de la croissance; nouveaux modèles d'innovation; systèmes nationaux d'innovation; systèmes nationaux de financement de l'innovation; technologie et emploi; technologie et mondialisation; et, progrès accomplis dans l'élaboration d'indicateurs.

This report falls into two main parts. The first looks somewhat narrowly at the growth of appreciative theorising and at what this can tell us about the relationships between technology and economic growth. The second part of the report is a selection of some ideas at the leading edge of science and technological policy work that has followed, in some cases directly, from TEP. More precisely, this document looks at the following points: technology and the new growth theories; new models of innovation; national systems of innovation; national systems for financing innovation; technology and employment; technology and globalization; and, developments in indicators.

Submitted by J.D. Irving Limited ; prepared by G.W. Adams. Fredericton : Canadian Forest Service, Maritimes Region, 1991. 6 p.

Reports findings of a technology mission to visit Canadian facilities involved in research on somatic embryogenesis and to evaluate the developmental stage of this technology for conifers. An additional goal of the mission was to identify those institutions with interest and ability in the areas of up-scaling production for possible development of strategic alliances. The mission included visits to the University of Guelph, the Plant Biotechnology Institute, the University of Saskatchewan, and BC Forest Research. Topics of research projects visited include development of desiccation protocols, development and optimisation of suspension cultures, encapsulation of mature embryos, cryopreservation, treatments of mature embryos to improve uniformity of germination, isoenzymes, and embryo sorting.

Presents a study done for a project designed to identify links between TVOntario programs and the common curriculum, reinvent links between TVOntario and schools/users, and explore approaches which use the potential of interactive technologies. Focuses on three studies carried out 1989-91: a teacher survey of educational television in English-language Ontario schools, a study of school uses of television and video, and a British study on school television. Findings of these studies are reviewed in the areas of access, use, integration of programming into class work, impacts on student learning, selection of programs, support available, and obstacles to use/needs for greater use.

Temperature and salinity atlas for the Scotian Shelf and the Gulf of Maine

By B. Petrie...et al. Dartmouth, NS : Bedford Institute of Oceanography ; Dept. of Fisheries & Oceans, Maritimes Region, Ocean Sciences Division, 1996. v, 398 p. : ill., Maps, Bibl. (Canadian techni-

This atlas divides the continental shelf and slope area from the Cabot Strait at the entrance of the Gulf of St Lawrence to Cape Cod into 68 subareas based primarily on topography. For each area, it calculates the monthly means, standard deviations, and extremes of temperature and salinity, and presents the results as tables, time series plots at selected depths, and contoured plots with time (depth) as the horizontal (vertical) axis. Optimal estimation was used to calculate the temperature, salinity, and sigma-t distributions at 0, 30, 50, 100, and 150 metres depth, and at the bottom, for the 15th of February, May, August, and November (corresponding to the winter, spring, summer, and fall). In addition, the atlas combines these results to determine the volumetric temperature and salinity distributions for those four periods. The appendix tabulates the number of years in which the data were collected for each subarea by month and depth.

Le gouvernement du Canada a créé le Groupe de travail sur l'avenir de l'industrie de la musique pour le conseiller sur ses politiques relatives à cette industrie. Plus précisément, le Groupe de travail devait élaborer des propositions permettant de faire en sorte que l'industrie puisse conserver son rôle de premier plan au chapitre de la promotion de l'identité culturelle canadienne en offrant un choix accru de musique canadienne. Les objectifs fixés pour l'industrie étaient qu'elle conserve sa capacité d'affronter la concurrence, au Canada et à l'étranger, et qu'elle reçoive une rémunération adéquate pour l'utilisation des œuvres protégées par droit d'auteur, tout en tirant parti des nouvelles technologies. This report presents the research and the findings of a task force that analysed the impact of technological change and other trends on the Canadian sound recording industry, examined current government policies and legislation affecting the Canadian music industry, and formulated specific policy recommendations to the Ministry of Canadian Heritage to ensure the long-term viability of the industry. The report first reviews the importance of cultural and international trade policy for the preservation of the industry, the economic importance of the music industry in Canada, and the development of government measures that have affected the industry such as the Sound Recording Development Program, copyright legislation, and Canadian content regulations for broadcasting. This is followed by a profile of the Canadian music industry, including publishing, performance, recording, and broadcasting sectors. The report concludes with specific policy recommendations addressing key issues such as the under-funding of music compared to other arts; inadequate copyright protection; the need for adequate national distribution structures; financial incentives and assistance; and the role of the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission.

Five guides present information to assist groups that are developing or acquiring non-market housing. The first focuses on ways that housing sponsor groups can work with the community, local government, and neighbours to overcome resistance (the 'not in my back yard' syndrome) and ultimately develop housing that has a lasting benefit to future residents and the community as a whole. The second presents the results of studies undertaken by professional appraisers in British Columbia investigating the effects of non-market family townhouses and group homes on the property values of surrounding homes. The third guide makes recommendations on the physical aspects of a proposed development: neighbourhood context, site planning, and building design. The fourth contains several checklists and an introductory letter for use by housing sponsors as they prepare to develop or acquire non-market housing proposals. The fifth discusses ways of working with local government in the development process for non-market housing.

TransFocus 2021 is a series of strategic transportation planning studies for selected Ontario areas that relies on a consultative approach for planning an integrated transportation system. The TransFocus consultation process includes public review and ratification, a scoping of the planning issues, interpretation and outreach, and confirmation. This report highlights the contents of submissions received in response to a draft summary report containing several recommendations regarding future transportation improvements, as well as modifications to existing policies and regulations, for the Niagara-Fort Erie area. The responses are arranged under the following headings: public transportation; roads and highways; international bridges; bicycles and pedestrians; policy and regulations; population, employment, and land use; environment; and other concerns.

The TransFocus project team has studied two highway networks within the context of three basic but differing land-use development scenarios. A third, non-highway intensive network has also been identified. This report is a practical and executive evaluation, overview, and commentary on the proposed non-highway enhancements. Specifically, it examines the unique influence of the transit market in the area, the potential of enhanced intercity transit service, and enhanced passenger rail service. It includes a review of existing bus and rail passenger services and develops a transit-based strategy that can provide an early alternative to the congested road system.

The first study area comprises the Niagara-Lake Erie region, selected because of the numerous environmental, agricultural, social, and economic issues in the area that are impacted by transportation decisions. Introduces the TransFocus study process, consultation process and advisory groups, and describes the technical process conducted. Reviews the area's demographic and economic trends, existing transportation infrastructure and environment, economic and demographic projections under two scenarios of growth, the modelling and forecasting of transportation demand, and the development and evaluation of transportation network alternatives. Concludes with a recommended plan that includes provincial highways, inter-regional public transportation, municipal transit, international bridge crossings, bicycle and pedestrian corridors, and various policy and regulatory initiatives.

The traffic zone projections were prepared based on three scenarios: high growth, compact development; low growth, compact development; and low growth, spread development. Detailed information regarding the methodology underlying the projects, as well as the traffic zone projections themselves, are included in the appendices.

TransFocus 2021 is comprised of a series of strategic transportation plans designed to select multi-modal transportation systems that are consistent with regional and Ontario provincial socio-economic and environmental objectives. This report describes the methodology and criteria which were used to evaluate the relative performance of three alternative transportation networks for the Niagara-Lake Erie area, and to identify a preferred alternative. The three alternatives were identified using a combination of public consultation and an internal Ministry of Transportation technical review. The three are: a series of expansions of the existing and committed road system centering on the Queen Elizabeth Way, plus some expansion of rail and bus transportation systems; a series of new links centring on a new mid-peninsula freeway located above the Niagara Escarpment, plus some expansion of rail and bus systems; and minimal expansion of the existing and committed road system, coupled with more significant expansions of rail and bus transportation systems, plus the possible use of high occupancy vehicle lanes. The three alternatives were compared according to 32 criteria encompassing a broad range of social, environmental, and economic objectives.

TransFocus 2021 is a study designed to produce a transportation plan for a study area covering about 7,300 square kilometres in the Niagara-Lake Erie region of Ontario. This report describes the components of the technical process of the study related to travel forecasting and network evaluation activities. It begins with a review of past socio-economic trends in the area and present transportation conditions, using 1986 as the base year. The report then develops a mathematical model for forecasting transportation demand, making extensive use of 1986 census data and traffic count information. Future socio-economic growth is analysed under three scenarios and four future transportation network alternatives are proposed for evaluation: the existing network plus committed projects to be constructed in the near future; two networks building on the former, one based on the Queen Elizabeth Way and the other on a mid-peninsula route; and a network based on public transportation and demand management alternatives. A separate chapter analyzes goods movements in the study area (air, rail, marine, and truck modes), focusing on truck movements. Finally, the report analyses network alternatives compared with the base-year situation, according to transportation network performance. Appendices include detailed traffic zone projections.

An Up-to-date and improved BVAR model of the Canadian economy

By Daniel Racette, Jacques Raynauld and Christian Sigouin. Ottawa : Bank of Canada, 1994. v, 50 p. : ill., Bibl. (Working paper / Bank of Canada ; 94-4 ISSN 1192-5434) ISBN 1-662-21474-9
MICROLOG 96-03513 (1 fiche)

This paper estimates a fully optimised bivariate vector autoregressive (BVAR) model of the Canadian economy for 1971-87. The model is well-adapted to the features of a small open economy and allows a richness of dynamic interrelations between the variables that is missing in most other models. The paper shows how the model can be used as an input in the monetary policy process either as a forecasting instrument or an analytical tool. It analyses dynamic interactions including structural shocks and their impulse responses, and compares forecast results to those using univariate autoregressive models. The results show the influence of monetary aggregates on macroeconomic variables and the role of foreign variables such as commodity prices.

Upgrader optimization : a new look at the regional upgrader with selected additions

Edmonton : Alberta Chamber of Resources Oil Sands Task Force ; Dept. of Energy ; Ottawa : Energy, Mines & Resources Canada, 1994. xxi, 150 p. : ill.
MICROLOG 96-03611 (2 fiche)

This report examines a series of alternatives to improving bitumen upgrader economics through adding on-site processes, and in one case, by expanding the basic upgrader's capacity. The basic upgrader would convert Cold Lake and Athabasca bitumen to a premium synthetic crude oil, with all add-ons producing readily merchantable products. The expanded upgrader (90,000 barrels/day) would use three conversion, hydrogen production, and sulphur recovery trains, with other processes single-train. Proposed additions to the basic upgrader and evaluated in this report include a facility for converting natural gas to naphtha feedstock and hydrogen via Fischer-Tropsch synthesis; a sweet crude oil fractionator with production of 6,000 and 9,000 barrels/day of jet fuel and diesel fuel respectively; a full refining operation to produce gasoline; and an integrated series of add-ons (Fischer-Tropsch, fractionation, and diluent addition). For each case considered, the report provides technical details of the processes involved along with product yields and properties, capital cost estimates, and operating cost estimates. Cases are compared on a before-tax net present value basis, using a 10% discount factor over the 28-year life of the upgrader. Research and development factors and environmental factors related to the upgrader are also outlined.

Urban bus structural integrity study

E.A. Williams & Associates Inc. Toronto : Canadian Urban Transit Assn, 1991. 92 p. : ill., Bibl. (STRP report / Strategic Transit Research Program ; 3) French ed. (Etude sur l'intégrité structurale...) : 96-03636/2, ISBN 0-920559-08-5
MICROLOG 96-03632 (2 fiche)

This study explores, from the point of view of transit management, desirable procurement requirements or procedures to ensure the long-term structural integrity of urban buses. The study incorporates an extensive literature review, a review of the extent of structural problems based on interviews with transit system managers and bus manufacturers, the development of a standard definition of structural failure, a review of current specification practices, and on-site visits to testing, research, and manufacturing facilities in Canada and the United States. Sections of the study cover structural integrity and failure, causes of structural failure such as corrosion and fatigue, structural integrity assurance, recommended strategies such as warranty provisions and transit system quality assurance, strategy costs, strategy implementation, and future research and studies. Appendices include guidelines for specifications, a summary of the literature review, and a report on the corrosion mechanism, types of corrosion, and corrosion control strategies.

The Use of automatic vehicle location for planning and management information

Sypher-Mueller International. Toronto : Canadian Urban Transit Assn, 1991. vii, 100 p. : ill., Bibl. (STRP report / Strategic Transit Research Program ; 4) French ed. (Les Systèmes de localisation...) : 96-03635/2, ISBN 0-920559-09-3
MICROLOG 96-03641 (2 fiche)

This study explores the means through which automatic vehicle location (AVL) systems can be used to provide off-line data and reports for planning and management purposes. A review of the literature and discussions with transit system representatives determined that there are three distinct types of off-line activities that can benefit from the use of AVL data: planning and scheduling; line management information; and executive information. These three activities are found to generally use the same information, but require it to be presented in different formats and levels of aggregation. The system design guidelines are presented in the form of a checklist offering recommendations and suggestions to facilitate the use of AVL for planning and management information in transit properties designing or tendering new AVL systems. The guidelines cover organisational, systems, and reporting issues. The appendices contain a large selection of examples of reports generated using AVL, organised under the three types of information.

User's guide to operational indicators for community health programs

Produced by Community Health Information Systems Working Group, National Health Information Council, and Community and Family Health, B.C. Ministry of Health and Ministry Responsible for Seniors. Ottawa : The Working Group, 1993. iii, 165 p. : ill. On cover: Canadian Institute for Health Information. ISBN 1-896104-01-0
MICROLOG 96-04010 (2 fiche)

This guide focuses on operational indicators, or measures which directly relate to or describe a community health program or service. The guide has been developed to supply a framework to help those involved in planning, managing, and delivering community health programs and services to develop indicators that provide information about programs and services offered. The guide begins with an overview on the development of a community-specific set of operational indicators. It then documents 65 operational indicators currently in use in British Columbia. Information provided for each indicator (where available or applicable) includes name of indicator, definition of the indicator and related terms, what the indicator measures, limitations affecting interpretation or use of the indicator, uses of the indicator in the planning and management process, method of calculating the indicator, suggested categories in which the indicator can be presented, observed values of the indicator in British Columbia, the source from which the indicator data can be obtained, a contact for obtaining further information, and relevant notes. The indicators are grouped under the following categories: adults and seniors; children and youth; communicable disease control; community care facilities; finance and administration; and public health protection.

Vegetation management by chemical and mechanical methods in aspen (Populus tremuloides) dominated clearcuts : analysis of coniferous crop seedlings and selected competition variables

W.L. Strong...et al. Edmonton : Natural Resources Canada, Canadian Forest Service, Northern Forestry Centre ; Alberta Environmental Protection, Land & Forest Services, 1995. viii, 73 p. : ill., Bibl. On cover: Canada-Alberta Partnership Agreement in Forestry. ISBN 0-662-23547-9 CCG-P no. Fo42-91/128-1995E
MICROLOG 96-04004 (1 fiche)

The main objective of this study was to analyse selected vegetation and tree characteristics from the Grande Prairie area of Alberta to determine which variables were best for predicting six to eight year old lodgepole pine and white spruce stem height, basal diameter, stem volume, and current height increment. The investigators collected crop seedling and corresponding vegetation data in experimental plots established in mixedwood (aspen-dominated) clearcuts for the purpose of assessing the effects of various site preparation and conifer release techniques on native vegetation and conifer crop seedling responses. As part of the data analyses, they developed 28 correlation matrices and 256 regression equations. The results indicated which growth characteristics correlated more easily with vegetation variables, and which vegetation variables appeared to have the greatest potential for predicting lodgepole pine seedling basal diameter and height. A lower frequency of significant regression equations and a lower degree of explained variance yielded poorer and less consistent results for white spruce. The results also indicated the utility of competition indices based on relative crop seedling and competing vegetation growth parameters as predictors of crop seedling growth.

Visibility and ambient aerosols in southwestern British Columbia during REVEAL, part 3 : further analysis of visibility data and fine aerosols collected during REVEAL

By Sara Pryor and Douw G. Steyn. Victoria : Ministry of Environment, Lands & Parks, Air Resources Branch, 1995. 63 p. : ill., Maps, Bibl. On cover: Regional Visibility Experimental Assessment in the Lower Fraser Valley. On cover: Fine particulates. ISBN 0-7726-2510-7
MICROLOG 96-03765 (1 fiche)

This report begins by summarising two previous reports on the REVEAL (Regional Visibility Experiment Assessment in the Lower Fraser Valley) concerning the application of analytical techniques for source apportionment and related visibility impacts of fine particulate optical and scene data, and the extension of the source apportionment of ambient aerosols during REVEAL. The report then discusses the validity of using carbon monoxide as a surrogate for estimating transportation-related particulate emissions. It also provides a detailed description of a period of severely reduced visibility during REVEAL. Optical and aerosol data are combined with meteorological data and information from a Lower Fraser Valley emissions inventory to make inferences regarding the causes of visibility impairment and sources of visibility-degrading aerosols. The report concludes with a review of fine aerosol models and their uncertainties.

St. John's : Dept. of Tourism, Culture & Recreation, 1994. 25 p. : ill.
MICROLOG 96-03499 (1 fiche)

This document is meant to stimulate a process of consultation and discussion among all stakeholders in Newfoundland who are involved in the future development of the tourism industry, and to serve as a catalyst to begin the development of a strategy to guide the future progress of the province's tourism industry. Sections of the document discuss definitions of tourism from both the demand and the supply sides, the benefits of tourism to the province, the costs of tourism (opportunity cost of not investing in other activities, social and environmental impacts, costs of developing tourism products), the advantages of the province in adventure and cultural tourism, and whether these advantages can translate into competitive advantages in the tourism marketplace. The document ends with a vision of the province's tourism industry in the 21st century and a discussion of conditions that would help achieve that vision, including the development of a tourism strategy, a better-developed cultural sector, and intergovernmental co-operation.

MICROLOG 96-03452 (1 fiche)

This report presents results of a study conducted to determine the physical and chemical composition of the municipal solid waste (MSW) stream entering the Burnaby Energy-from-Waste Facility. The study also examined the environmental availability of trace metals in selected waste components to assess the environmental behaviour of these materials under various waste management options. A specific part of the study examined the fate and behaviour of cadmium and lead compounds during incineration through experiments involving addition of highly concentrated materials to the waste fed into the incinerator. The physical composition of the waste was similar to that of MSW from other Canadian municipalities with blue-box recycling programs. The report describes the sampling, analytical, and test methods used and the results presented include the accuracy of direct and indirect approaches to determining MSW characteristics, a refuse elemental disposal index developed to evaluate the relative importance of a waste component's trace metal content, the distribution of volatile and heat-stable trace metals within an incinerator system, and the distribution of metals within MSW components.

This water demand study is one of a number of studies to be prepared to assist with the development of a long range Water and Wastewater Master Plan for the region. The purpose of the study was to analyse historic water production and consumption records, and to develop projected water demand scenarios based upon an understanding of relevant policies, the potential for water efficiency savings, and changes in land use and socio-economic trends. Some of the key findings of the study, including modelling results, are summarised in this document.

Includes weekly counts and cumulative counts of all fish species recorded at 19 in-river sites on rivers draining into the southern Gulf of St Lawrence. Data were collected from 1952 to 1993 at sites initially established as primary data sources for salmon assessments or for the protection of spawning salmon. The sites include trap nets located in tidal waters which captured fish moving upstream and downstream and captured a portion of the fish returning to a river system; other sites consisted of barriers which blocked all of the river. Some of the latter traps only counted fish moving upstream but others had separate upstream and downstream traps. A total of 34 identified species were counted at the sites.

Winnipeg : Manitoba Round Table on Environment & Economy ; Sustainable Development Coordination Unit, 1992. 67 p. : ill., Bibl.
MICROLOG 96-03607 (1 fiche)

This report was prepared as a follow-up to the public consultation process regarding the principles and guidelines of sustainable development for Manitoba as developed in the document called Towards a Sustainable Development Strategy for Manitobans. It introduces the concept of sustainable development, reviews the degree of public agreement with the ten principles and six fundamental guidelines set out in that document, and presents a sampling of public comment regarding those principles and guidelines. The report ends with samples of comment on the concept of sustainable development and the overall sustainable development strategy, and on the public consultation process and the questionnaire used in that process.

The 1994 Youth Smoking Survey (YSS) is one of the initiatives of Health Canada's Tobacco Demand Reduction Strategy (TDRS). Health Canada has collected information relating to the smoking behaviour of Canadians for over thirty years. These surveys have typically been limited to adults 15 years of age and older. Consequently, there exists a data gap concerning the smoking behaviour of Canadian youth. This survey addresses the need for more information on youth attitudes and use of tobacco products and is the first survey in Canada to provide national estimates for youth aged 10-14. This document consists of a number of fact sheets, each relating to a specific aspect of the survey. Topics covered include: prevalence and amount smoked; profile of girls and boys; provincial and regional comparisons; attitudes and beliefs; cigarette purchasing; and marketing of tobacco products.

In Nova Scotia, zeolites are found in the North Mountain basalt, correlative basalt plugs and flows on the north side of the Minas basin, and in some associated sediments. Nova Scotian zeolites are of interest to mineralogists, geologists, and prospectors for their beauty as minerals. In addition, the growing interest in the industrial uses of zeolite minerals requires precise documentation of zeolites and their distribution. This report collects available data from the published literature on the distribution of Nova Scotian zeolites and presents the data in an extensive table listing known zeolite localities from south-west to north-east. Columns in the table indicate the zeolite assemblage, mode of occurrence, associated minerals, and bibliographic references used for the particular locality.

Canadian Index

A comprehensive index providing access to nearly 100,000 citations each year from: nine major daily newspapers, over 200 Canadian trade and business periodicals, over 50 specialized Canadian trade magazines for which indexing is unavailable elsewhere, and more than 350 general periodicals.

KIOSK: CBCA

KIOSK: CBCA is a reference tool which combines a high quality indexing and abstracting database (CBCA) with direct access to the fulltext content of the articles indexed.

CBCA Fulltext

CBCA Fulltext provides fulltext access to Canadian periodicals and current affairs information, and incorporates the largest and most-comprehensive subject guide to periodical literature. CBCA Fulltext allows searching on Windows, Macintosh, DOS and UNIX platforms.

CBCA OnDisc

CBCA OnDisc is the Knight Ridder CD-ROM version of the Canadian Index, giving you access to ten years of indexing. It includes every citation in the Canadian Index, plus thousands of informative abstracts which do not appear in the print edition.

KIOSK: Maclean's

Published in cooperation with Maclean's magazine, KIOSK: Maclean's contains every article and news report published by Canada's Weekly Newsmagazine over an eight year period.

CNI Clips: Press Clippings on Microfiche

CNI Clips is a unique service which provides the full-text of more than 40,000 Canadian Press news stories and feature articles each year, and is delivered in a practical and economical microfiche format.

Canadian Education Index

Canadian Education Index covers more than 200 Canadian education periodicals, as well as reports and monographs from the educational research community across Canada. In addition, the Index covers report literature from government agencies, educational faculties and teachers' associations, and large school boards.

Canadian Education Index Thesaurus

Canadian Education Index Thesaurus is a bilingual controlled vocabulary of over 5,000 terms, developed for the indexing and retrieval of French or English-language material in Canadian education, and is an invaluable research aid for users of the Canadian Education Index.
